

HEALTHY BABIES.

WATCHFUL MOTHERS CAN KEEP THEIR BABIES HEALTHY, ROSY-CHEEKED AND HAPPY.

Nothing in the world is such a comfort and joy as a healthy, hearty rosy-cheeked, happy baby.

Babies can be kept in perfect health only by having at hand and administering when needed some purely vegetable, harmless remedy, and of all this class of Medicines Baby's Own Tablets are conceded to be the best.

For constipation, colic, diarrhoea, simple fevers, sour stomachs, teething babies, indigestion and sleeplessness, these tablets are a really wonderful cure. You can give them to the smallest baby without the slightest fear.

Dissolved in water, they will be taken readily. They contain absolutely not a particle of opiate or other injurious drugs. They are small, sweet, lozenges that any baby will take without objection, and their action is prompt and pleasant. They will tone up the whole system and make the little one as hearty and free from infantile disorders as any mother could wish.

Mrs. Walter Brown, Milby, Que., says: "I have never used any medicine for baby that did him so much good as Baby's Own Tablets. I would not be without them." This is the verdict of all mothers who have used these tablets.

They cost 25 cents a box. All druggists sell them or they can be secured by sending the price direct and the tablets will be forwarded prepaid. The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Dept. T., Brockville, Ont.

Mrs. Slimson—I don't know whether to get a pew or a sitting in church next year. Slimson—Are you going to have the same clergyman? Mrs. Slimson—Yes. Slimson Then I should apply for a lower berth.

Stop This! Would be a justifiable cry directed against the countless hamburgs that offer a cure for Catarrh. There is only one scientific method of treatment for Catarrh. Make the air you breathe the carrier of healing, balsamic, curative agents. It bathes every inch of mucous membranes with its healing soothing properties. That's Catarrhoxone. Your druggist or doctor will tell you it's the only effective method of treatment and that it is sure—prompt—permanent. Remember the name Catarrhoxone. All dealers, 25c and $1.

Sold by J. E. Richards. Manager (Uncle Tom's Cabin troupe)—I hope there will be no indiscriminate shooting to-night on the part of the audience! Sheriff—Not a bit of it! There's the most discriminating lot of dramatic critics this side of New York in Frozen Dog.

No Home should be without it. Pain-Killer, the best all-round medicine ever made. Used as a liniment for bruises and swellings. Internally for cramps and diarrhoea. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis'. 25c and 50c.

Mrs. Inland—Is eight dollars the best you can do? Salesman—Yes, madam. You've marked it down to seven ninety-nine or ninety-eight, but I don't haf no cheap tricks in our peezness.

Children Cry for CASTORIA. A quiet wedding took place at the residence of the Rev. John Davy, who performed the ceremony. The contracting parties were Mr. Hays and Miss Minnie Law both of Aylmer formerly a G.A.T.R. agent here. They have the best wishes of their friends for their future happiness.

Mr. Alfred Clemens, of St. Thomas, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. J. McKenney.

Married at high noon. The home of Mr. Andrew Hovans Paris was the scene of a very pretty event on Wednesday the 18th when his daughter Eudora was united in marriage to Mr. J. B. Jewell, of Gobles Corners Ont. The ceremony being performed by the Rev. Geo. K. Adams, of the Brant Ave. Methodist church Brantford. The bride who was attired in a dove colored travelling suit was attended by Miss Emma Jewell while Mr. Herbert Irwin ably supported the groom. The wedding march was led by Wm. Haven brother of the bride. After the ceremony about fifty guests sat down to a sumptuous wing dinner. The many useful presents testified to the esteem in which the bride and groom are held by their many friends. A happy couple left amid showers of rice on the afternoon train for Niagara Falls, Buffalo and Cleveland.

Neva's Three Lovers

BY MRS. HARRIET LEWIS,

Author of "Lady Kildare," "Beryl's Husband," "The Old Life's Shadows," Etc., Etc.

Lady Wynde looked startled—

"The very thing!" she exclaimed. "I have been thinking that I should not long be allowed to remain mistress of Hawkhurst after Neva's return. An heiress like her will not want for suitors, and she will marry, and I cannot prevent it, and the proper way is to direct her marriage for our own benefit. Is Rufus likely to please a romantic school-girl?"

"I think he cannot fail to please her. He is not yet one and twenty, well-looking, accomplished, well educated, rather weak-willed and easily governed—and like clay in my hands. 'Tis has romantic notions about love and marriage, and if he is on the ground first I am sure he will win the girl's heart. I had a quarrel with him some weeks ago, and he went away from me at my command, and has taken cheap rooms somewhere and is trying to live by painting cheap pictures, or some such thing. I'll send for him, and have him up at Wyndham directly."

"Why did you quarrel with him, Craven? I thought you were so fond of him."

"I was—I am. But he dared oppose his will to mine, and I turned him adrift, to let him try how he could get along without me. He is not long out of his university, and is perfectly helpless about earning money, but he has some high-flown notions which hardship will cure. To be frank, our quarrel was about a little music teacher that the boy thought himself in love with. He has given her up, and will be glad enough to be summoned to me. When will Miss Wynde be here?"

"I had a letter to-day from Madame Dalaut, Neva's preceptor, inquiring my wishes in regard to the girl. Neva has completed her studies, and Madame Dalaut intimates that she ought to be removed from school and be allowed to enter society. Moreover, the midsummer holidays have commenced, and the other pupils are going to their homes. I have concluded to send Artress over to Paris to-night to bring Neva home."

"Do so. My son shall also be at Wyndham to-morrow, and shall be introduced to the heiress the day after her return. I will engage rooms for Rufus and myself at the Wyndham inn, so that I can be near until our marriage. Is this plan agreeable to you?"

"Perfectly. We must be prompt in our actions. Neva must become engaged to Rufus before she actually enters society here. Her marriage can take place at the same time with our own in October. Elsie can do the two trousseaux at the same time. It is an admirable plan, and a worthy continuation of our little game."

They talked further, disclosing to each other their nefarious plans of self-aggrandizement. Craven blurted in lover-like fashion, and over the exacting Lady Wynde was persuaded that his passion for her had received a new impetus, and that he loved her as she loved him—with an utter devotion.

As the dinner hour drew near Mr. Black took his departure, not caring to excite the gossip of the house, and he held up his first visit to Lady Wynde. Directly after dinner, Artress, attired in gray traveling suit, set out in a carriage for Canterbury, on her way to Paris, whence she was to bring to her own home the heiress of Hawkhurst.

CHAPTER VII.

The dingy little packet-boat from Calais to Dover, carrying the mails, bore her usual complement of passengers upon the bright midsummer day upon which young Neva Wynde returned after years of absence to her own country.

A few tall, mustached Frenchmen, with cigars in their mouths; a German or two with the inevitable pipe; a few students returning from foreign universities; a few pedestrian tourists with hobnail shoes, preposterous alpenstocks, and Artress displayed Bradshaw or Murray, several stout and puffy Englishmen, with singularly pale faces, and the usual number of retold ill-dressed English women, with flimsy muslin dresses and fur tippets in odd contrast—a conjunction much affected by the average British lady—made up the majority of the passengers.

Some of these people walked about, affecting to enjoy the fresh breeze; others studied the now useless guide book, recalling their adventures; and others scanned the blue shores of France alternately with the chalk cliffs of England through the tourist glasses slung from their shoulders, and wondered aloud if the passage would be accomplished in the usual ninety minutes.

An odd feature of a Channel packet is the total disregard of appearances manifested by the passengers upon it. Very few, if any, persons go below into the stuffy little cabins, and doubting souls prefer themselves with ominous white bows at the outset of the voyage, and should it come upon them they proceed to make themselves comfortable upon the deck, or moan, or swear, according to the sex of the sufferer, totally unmindful and oblivious of lookers on.

As a corner by herself, at one side of the boat, her thick green veil hid her face shrouding a bowed head, sat Artress. Lady Wynde's gray companion, in a condition of great misery. She had no thought of anyone but herself in that crisis of her physical career, and gave no heed to her young charge, the one great dearth of her soul being to find herself once more upon solid land.

At the opposite side of the boat, leaning lightly upon the rail, and looking back with wistful, longing eyes upon the fading blue of the French shores, stood a young girl who was strangely lovely. She was slender and graceful as a swaying reed, and her lithe, light figure carried itself with a slight hauteur that was inexpressibly charming. Her high-bred manner, her evident good looks, and sweetness betrayed thorough culture of heart and mind. Her face was a rare poem. The features were slightly irregular, and even in repose, with a grave shadow upon her fair brows, her countenance bore a bright, piquant witchery, her complexion was very pure and fair; her lips a vivid scarlet, and under her broad forehead a pair of wonderful red-brown eyes sparkled and glowed with strange brilliancy. Her hair very abundant, and of a reddish-brown tint as rare as beautiful, was gathered into braids at the back of her small, noble head.

She was dressed in a traveling suit of black cashmere, and wore a black hat surmounted with a scarlet wing. She was Neva Wynde, the owner of Hawkhurst, one of the greatest heiresses in England, and now the object of the sinister machinations of her handsome step-mother and Craven Black.

Her school-days were over, and she was on her way to a home she had not visited for years, and to a guardian she did not know, and who was secretly her enemy. She had emerged from the pleasant security of the school-room into a region of perils. A premonition of the dangers before her seemed almost to come upon her now, and into her glowing eyes crept a look of sorrowful yearning, and of passionate protest against the friendlessness of her lot.

A few feet distant from her, also leaning upon the railing, stood a young man, whose gaze, ostensibly fixed upon the French coast, now and then rested upon the girl's speaking face with an expression of keen admiration and interest. He thought in his own soul that he had never seen a being so fresh, so dainty, so pure, so rarely beautiful. She seemed utterly alone. No one inquired how she felt, nor offered her a seat, nor looked after her, and her young admirer wondered if she were alone in the world, as she seemed.

He was speculating upon the subject when a sudden lurch of the boat upon the short, chopping Channel waves, caused Neva to involuntarily lean her head upon the railing, and pitched her abruptly along the deck toward him. He sprang forward and caught her in his arms. She recovered her equilibrium upon the instant, and again grasped the railing, blushing, confused, and murmuring her thanks for his civility.

"The Channel is rough to-day," remarked the young gentleman. "Shall I not find you a seat?"

"Thank you, no," returned Neva, in her sweet, low, cultured voice. "I prefer standing."

"The words were simple enough, and her manner was quiet and reserved, but her voice went to the young man's heart thrilling it with a strange sensation. He did not attempt a retreat, and Neva looked up at him with something of surprise in her glorious red-brown eyes.

As he encountered her full gaze, his face flushed, his eyes glowed, and a warm smile curved his mouth. "May I beg your pardon," he said, "but are you not Miss Wynde, of Hawkhurst?"

"I was sure, when I met your full glance, that you were Neva Wynde," cried the young gentleman. "You do not remember me, I see; and yet, when you went away to that odious Paris school, you left me a letter with tears, and you promised to be true to me, little Neva. And you have forgotten me—"

"No, no," cried the young girl, an answering glow in her face, and her eyes shining like stars. "Is it really you, Arthur? How you have changed!"

She held her hand out to him, and he clasped it with a long, lingering pressure. Her eyes scanned his face in an earnest scrutiny, and she blushed again when she saw how handsome he was, and how like he was to an ideal she had long cherished in the very depths of her young soul.

It was fair, with warm blue eyes, hidden hair, and a moustache of tawny gold. He had a frank, noble face, and his sunny eyes betted a generous soul. One who can might read in his countenance a brave, dauntless soul, a grand, ungodly nature, an enlightened spirit, quick sympathies, and an honest, truthful, resolute character. Neva thought as she shyly regarded him, that he was very like a hero of romance.

"I can hardly believe that it is Arthur," she said, smiling, her face soothed. "You are not at all like the Arthur I know, and yet I can see the old boyish shyness and brightness of spirit. Your moustache has changed your looks greatly, I find."

"It makes me look older perhaps," said Lord Towny gravely, "and as I am but three and twenty,

Scrofula

What is commonly inherited is not scrofula but the scrofulous disposition. This is generally and chiefly indicated by cutaneous eruptions; sometimes by pale-ness, nervousness and general debility.

The disease attacked Mrs. M. S. Taylor, Union St., Troy, N.Y., when she was eighteen years old, manifesting itself by a bunch in her neck, which soon grew pain, was lanced, and became a running sore.

It afflicted the daughter of Mrs. J. E. Jones, Parker City, Ind., when 18 years old, and developed so rapidly that when she was 18 she had eleven running sores on her neck and about her ears.

These sufferers were not benefited by professional treatment, but, as they voluntarily say, were completely cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

This peculiar medicine positively corrects the scrofulous disposition and radically and permanently cures the disease.
