Weaver preached an appropriate sermon from the narrative of the healing of the impotent man at the Pool of Bethesda, showing that the object and aim of fraternal societies were thoroughly in accord with Christ's works and teachings while on earth, and that such organizations were founded on Christianity and were co-workers with the church in the uplifting of humanity and had the benignant smile of divine approval. Excellent music was rendered by the united choirs of the Baptist and Methodist churches. On returning to the lodge-room a hearty vote of thanks, accompanied by something more tangible, was tendered Bro. Weaver for his excellent discourse.

THE WALDORF-ASTORIA HOTEL

Elegant Automatic Mechanism by Which Its Coal is Handled.

There are many things about the management of a large hotel which the patron takes for granted without inquiry or investigation. He can form no idea of the methods employed from what he sees in the office, the corridors, the dining rooms and the other parts of the building to which he has access, and there are not many guests who wish to pry into the secrets.

For those who take an interest in such matters the arrangements for receiving and disposing of the coal are not the least interesting. The Waldorf-Astoria uses 140 tons of coal every 24 hours during the winter months. This coal is all delivered on the Thirty-fourth street side of the building, but one rarely sees a coal cart in front of the hotel. It is all of the pea and buckwheat sizes and is dumped from the carts into an opening in the ground in the middle of the Astor court roadway. It falls into a hopper, which holds about 10,000 pounds, and from there it is carried on an endless chain provided with buckets to a vast coal bin, which has a capacity of 700 tons. Daylight never reaches this bin, which, with its few blinking lights and great piles of coal, reaching nearly to the vaulted roof, looks like a corner in a coal mine and little like an annex to a palatial hotel. By an arrangement of levers the coal may be dumped from the buckets at various points, so that with the aid of a shoveler it may be evenly distributed in the bin.

The boiler room is situated lower down in the ground, and the coal reaches the fire boxes without being handled. When the boiler attendant needs coal for his fire, he pulls a lever, which opens a trap, and through this half a ton of coal falls into a feeder, which looks like a monster funnel. When the feeder has been filled, it is pushed forward on an overhead track, and when it has reached the proper point a trap in the narrow end of the funnel is drawn aside, and the coal drops into a trough in front of the fire box, whence it goes into the fire.

From the time it leaves the coal wagon until it enters the fire the coal takes care of itself, and, with the exception of the straightening out in the bin, which is done by one man during the day and one man at night, and the distribution over the fire surface by the boiler attendant, the 140 tons of coal which are used every day are handled by machinery.—New York Tribune.

DID AS LOGAN DID.

When Medill Gave Callon the Chance of Making It.

Joseph Medill, the famous editor of the Chicago Tribune, and Senator Callon were once political antagonists, and at that time Callon read all manner of "shots" at him on the editorial page of the Tribune. That time, too, was in a campaign when such shots were supposed to count. Mr. Medill held to the good old fashioned doctrine that an infusion of the personal in journalism seasoned the editorial page. The senator understood this and treasured no grievance. One day at the close of the campaign during which The Tribune had conducted continuous hostilities toward him he was in Chicago and, meeting a Tribune man, inquired how his old friend Medill was. Before he knew what was going on the senator found that smart young man had informed Mr. Medill he wanted to see him and that Mr. Medill had telephoned back that he was at The Tribune office.

"Of course," said the senator, "I went up there, although I had no such intention when the conversation started. As I went in Mr. Medill greeted me very cordially. He evidently wasn't entertaining anything personal against me, so I asked: 'Look here! Medill! Why in thunder have you been roasting me all through the campaign?'"

"Callon, sit down and let me tell you a story. John A. Logan asked me a question very much like that at the close of a campaign some years ago. He didn't like what The Tribune had been saying about him. One day I heard a knock at the door. I said, 'Come in!' The door opened, and there was 'Black Jack' with his eyes flashing, his hair thrown back and a look on his face a little fiercer than usual. 'Come in,' I said again. 'Do I come in a friend or a foe?' said Logan. 'I pass, senator. You make it,' I said. Logan came in and sat down, and we had a pleasant visit."

"Of course," said Senator Callon, "I followed suit when Medill had told his story on Logan. I found him very genial. It was evident at once he hadn't anything against me."

The Birth of the Daisy.

The origin of the daisy is very prettily told in the following legend: It was the belief of the Celts people that when an infant was taken away from earth a flower was sent. A woman, Malvina, lost an infant son, but as she sat brooding and inconsolable her attendants came running in with joyful news. "Oh, Malvina," they cried, "your babe has come back—a wondrous new flower has come to earth—white are its leaves near the heart, but nearer the edges tinted with pink or crimson like an infant's flesh! When the wind waves it on the hillside, behold, 'tis a child playing to and fro!" And Malvina rose and looked upon her flower and no more mourned, saying, "This flower, Malvina's son returned, will comfort all mothers that have lost their infants."

Stand Up For Your Own.

Frank Everest of Atchinson—and peace to his ashes—going to Europe for the first time, met an old traveler, who exclaimed: "What have you never been in London? Why, I go over every year!"

An hour later Everest and the traveler were talking of the Missouri valley, when Everest got it back with: "Never been to Omaha? Why, I go there every week!"

There are too many men on earth who believe with the traveler that dense population makes civilization, and too few Everests brave enough to stand up and testify for the Omahas of this world.—Atchinson Globe.
