

A Transformation.

CHAPTER IX.

The cocks and the hens are in a high state of indignation. What does it all mean, this flying backward and forward through the yard? To Terry with meal in her pretty hands they are quite accustomed, but Terry playing hide and seek from the stable to the coach-house, where, in good times past, the coaches used to be, and from the cow-stall to the sheds, is a thing altogether out of their line. The pigeons, too, seem greatly upset by the proceedings beneath them, but they are up so high in their little homes over the stables that they can afford to look down upon the matter with a smiling contempt.

"Tip," shouts Geoffrey, having caught hold of Terry's skirt, but ineffectually, for she eludes him and escapes, though with a slight rent in her gown.

It is a day that makes one wonder if there is anything more beautiful to show. Light is a pale shimmering gold, the air delicious. All over the place the perfume of swooning flowers comes to one on the top of the old wall dark velvet willow-appears are nodding their homely heads. In the orchard, just behind, behind the place where the roses are, is a week later—a week that has passed down from the Hall to see Terry, and every day they had parted on exactly the same terms as they parted the day before. It seemed to him impossible to get nearer to the girl, to see into her heart, to touch the core of it. He could hold her hand; she had borne that, endured, he had seen her face, but the bitterness, was the word. Twice he had kissed her; she had said nothing, but she certainly had not kissed him.

At night he used to laugh at himself—there was little gaiety in the laugh—and wonder why on earth he didn't make an end of it, and break sunder a connection which redounded to nothing but his own discomfort. Yet when the morning came and he started to see her once again, and yet more, when he did see her, he knew he would never be the one to sever his life from hers. And through it all a deadly jealousy troubled him—jealousy of her cousin—

Every day he saw her at her home, and often in the evenings she dined at the Hall. Fanny would have had her come every evening, but Terry sometimes made excuses. Now and then, too, she "justified" with Fanny, but he couldn't help knowing, from a word here and there, that it was less often than before he came on the scene.

After these luncheons he used to walk back with her through the scented woods, and always he was conscious that he made no way with her.

She did not care! She was marrying him—she had told him that frankly that first day—his money only. But she had told him, too, that her heart was free, and he had built a great structure upon that. It seemed now to be crumbling to ruin. Yet to give her up—No! Never!

To-day he has come down as usual to pay her his morning visit—a visit seldom accomplished without the boy's supervision. He has come a little earlier this morning, hoping to escape them, but he has quite to himself for five minutes. Half-way down the avenue the sound of voices, coming from the yard that lies to his right hand, reaches his ears. He pauses: is not that her laugh, that ringing silver peal?

After it comes a cry of "Caution!" Evidently there is no escaping the boys. What a pity Mr. Gabbett cannot give them their lessons in the morning rather than in the afternoon! The afternoon is so full, and Terry is so seldom at home then. He turns towards the yard with a half-suppressed sigh.

Leading into it from one point is a low gate. To this Trefusis comes, and there is an excellent view of the entire yard from this gate-way, as Trefusis acknowledges to himself a moment later, ringing grimly. He stops short at the entrance, and gazes at the picture before him.

Behind a huge water-barrel, Terry is standing, stooping low to avoid the eyes of her brothers, and holding a long, thin stick, as Laurence O'More. Every now and then either of them peeps out from his or her side of the barrel, and as quickly draws back again, but not before Trefusis's glance can see that Terry's charming face is lit with laughter.

Evidently the game of hide-and-seek is now in full swing, but the boys are on the wrong scent; they are hunting about down below, behind the hay-stack, up in the loft. Now they are again, and now they are getting a little warmer. Terry is glancing out from behind the barrels growing full of excitement. She darts back behind her shelter, and Trefusis, from where he is standing, can see that she is whispering to her companion.

Meantime, the foe is drawing very near, and to add to the discomfort of the two in hiding, a flock of soft white pigeons, hovering sweetly about their heads in the yard, fresh from their corn-larvices committed in the corn-daisies around them, make straight for Terry. They are not sure of their crumbs when she is near?

The boys being now in the stable, Terry has the courage to show herself, also her hands, to try and frighten away her feathered friends. In vain! Lower and lower they descend, their soft silvery wings gleaming in the sunlight.

Trefusis can see her rise in desperate stress, can see her uplifted arms, can almost hear her lips cry, "Cush! Cush!" He can see, too, that the pigeons think nothing of this, are not in the least of their loving mistress. Boldly they descend upon her, perching on head and arms and dainty shoulders, cooing loudly to the while.

And now the boys are out again. They see the pigeons. Where the pigeons are, there surely is Terry. A piercing war-whoop bursts from them. Terry springs to her feet and stands for a second laughing, her snowy tresses still glittering round her; then she springs forward, Laurence after her, the boys in hot pursuit.

They head her that she makes straight for the small gate where stands Justice—that is, Trefusis. She is laughing as she runs; her face is all alight, full of a beautiful, almost childish, excitement.

The fair fall earth, the enraptured skies. She imagines in her heart that she is flying. Night and the stars are in her eyes. But her sweet face is beaming day. A boundless stretch of flowers, a dewy brilliance of rays of flowers, she has run almost into Trefusis's arms—into his presence, rather, for his arms are certainly at this moment not ready to receive her—before she sees him.

Then she stops short. The lovely light from her eyes, the laughter from her lips.

"You!" she says, faintly.

Trefusis says nothing. For the first time in his life he is well regulated, he finds himself without words. That change in her face! The dying away of the mirth, the happy laughter! He had been angry because O'More was with her, but that only counts now. He can think of only one thing, that when she saw him her pretty face fell, her pretty smile died.

A very rage of anger against her surges in his heart.

"Oh! I didn't know," she cries, breathing quickly both from surprise and her late fast run, "that you were coming so early."

"I perceive," says Trefusis, dryly.

Terry turns round as if to say something to Larry or the boys, but they are nowhere to be seen. Larry, scenting trouble in the air, has considerably carried her brothers away with him. Thus deserted, Terry looks more lonely at Trefusis.

"We were playing hide-and-seek," she says, nervously.

It is the unhappiest thing, but her nervousness only angers him still further. What has he done to her, that she should distrust him? What has there been in all his dealings with her to cause her to know fear, however slight, however transitory?

"I am sorry I was unfortunate enough to interrupt you," he says, calmly, without a trace in his voice of the emotion that is stirring him to his heart's core. This is his misfortune. If he had stormed at her, scolded her heartily, shown himself abominably jealous, she could have understood him—having been brought up in an atmosphere where every one said what he or she thought at the moment, where anger, justly shown, was accepted in a right spirit, but a storm or two in the weak consideration of little consequences. The Trefusis, though she knew he must be angry with her, should refrain from saying so, make him at once even a greater stranger to her than he was before. Larry would have said so much! and then she could have explained; but he, Mr. Trefusis, he will say nothing. She feels suffocated. Suddenly a sense of anger, most honest anger, stirs her breast. She turns to him a charming face, now all frowning with her thought.

A Grand Feature

Of Hood's Sarsaparilla is that while it purifies the blood and sends it coursing through the veins, it has a most beneficial effect upon the whole life and vigor to every function of the body. Hence the expression so often heard, "Hood's Sarsaparilla made a new man of me." It overcomes that tired feeling so common now.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, always reliable and beneficial. A weakness of many good resolutions lies in the fact that they follow a bad pre-arrangement.

Man Made Happy.—GENTLEMEN:—Five years I have been a great sufferer with Dyspepsia; the pain in the pit of my stomach was almost unbearable and life only seemed a drag to me. When I would go to sleep I would have horrible dreams, and my life became very miserable, as there was no rest either day or night. But with the use of only two bottles of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery this unhappy state has all been changed and I am a well man. I can assure you my case was bad one, and I send you this that it may be the means of convincing others of the wonderful curative qualities possessed by this medicine, that are specially adapted for the cure of Dyspepsia. A lady customer of mine had the Dyspepsia very bad, she could scarcely eat anything, and was troubled with pains similar to those I suffered with; and she cured herself with two bottles of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. I wish you success with your medicine, as I am fully convinced that it will do all you claim for it.

Signed, MELVILLE B. MARSH, Abercorn, P. Q. General Merchant.

Some converts confess enough in a minute to keep religion on the anxious seat for life.

Why will you allow a cough to lacerate your throat or lungs and run the risk of filling a consumptive's grave, when the timely use of Bickel's Anti-Consumptive Syrup the pain can be allayed and the danger avoided? This Syrup is pleasant to the taste, and unsurpassed for relieving, healing and curing all affections of the throat and lungs, coughs, colds, bronchitis, etc.

Don't lose your own health by drinking to that of others.

SHILOH'S VITALIZER.

THE KNIFE!

A Brother's Revenge—A Dangerous Affair in Buffalo.

BUFFALO, July 1.—Geo. Sapienza stabbed, probably fatally, at 1 o'clock this morning, Frank Fosso, aged 25 years, who had boasted that he had betrayed Sapienza's sister. Sapienza's father held Fosso while the young man repeatedly drove the knife into him. Mrs. Sapienza and the daughter fought off Fosso's brother, who attempted to come to his rescue. When Fosso had lost consciousness the elder Sapienza, cast him to the ground and jumped on him. The younger Fosso's cries brought a crowd and the assailants relinquished their prey and escaped, but were subsequently arrested after a most exciting experience.

Risky Advertisements.

BUFFALO, N. Y., July 1.—Papers in a suit for $50,000 were served yesterday on the Courier Company for Bronner Bros. The suit is based on statements contained in an advertisement of a rival clothing house published in the Courier two weeks ago. In this advertisement the statement is made that Bronner Bros. failed in New York and dragged down an honored firm. It also stated that Bronners were guilty of deceit. There will be another suit for damages against the same paper, it is said, on the same advertisement.

THE BABY ONCE MORE.

Serious Facts for the Consideration of Mothers.

All wise people will readily admit that, for young infants, the ideal food is healthy mother's milk, but when this is out of the question a prepared infant food must be used. This prepared food should closely resemble healthy human milk.

It is now admitted everywhere that Lactated Food is the best substitute in the world for breast milk. Its basis is the same as that of mother's milk, that is, sugar of milk; and with it are combined the nutritive qualities of the great cereals, wheat, barley and oats, so prepared as to be readily digested and assimilated. The efficacy of the nutritive qualities of Lactated Food has long been acknowledged by the medical profession. No other food in the world has received such hearty recommendations and praise from mothers.

It is the only food in the world that can ward off dysentery and cholera infantum, and it can truly be said that Lactated Food saves the babies from death.

Every mother should give her infant Lactated Food if it is not progressing in health and growth. One week's feeding with the great Food will satisfy any mother of its virtues and superiority.

Increase in speed is not the result of fast thinking.
