King Would Like to Eradicate Them in His Reign.

Honduras, Feb. 22. - It is said by the gleaners of curious information that the King takes immense interest in the question of how to prevent fog in London, and would like his reign to be memorable to posterity as the one in which, among other things, that nuisance was abolished. The ambition is certainly worthy of the very practical sovereign, for there are few things that would give greater benefit to the nation than the attainment of it. in view of the wonderful things that are constantly being done it is really incredible that science cannot accomplish so comparatively simple a matter. So far there have been only really serious black fogs in London this winter, but they were the worst seen for many years. The last fog is estimated to have cost London from $400,000 to $500,000 in hard cash, a great deal of which goes into the pockets of the electric light and gas companies. To the railway companies the fog cost fortunes. Hundreds of extra men were employed and
