There was a very large market of vegetables. Potatoes were again offered in very large quantities, but had only a moderate sale. The market has been glutted lately with the supply, as there has hardly been a market day when there hasn't been from 20 to 50 loads offered. Naturally the prices are not very strong. The majority sold at 50c, while some single hags brought 60c.

Of other vegetables cathons were of other vegetables, cabbages were very much in evidence, and like all other green vegetables had a very good sale. cauliflowers were also offered in Apples, practically the only fruit now off red on the market, were somewhat less plentiful today. There was practically no change in butchers' meats, with the exception of dressed bogs, which are inclined to be easier; $10 was the maximum price to-day, despite the fact that there was the usual good demand. It is expected that the price for live hogs for Monday's market will be $7.50. market will be $7.50.

There was little hay offered and no change in prices. Oats, too, were fairly scarce, and showed little tendency toward any change in price, the majority selling from $1.22 to $1.25. Other quotations are as follows:
