AERIAL FLEETS FOR FUTURE WARS

Russia Orders Eight Aeroplanes from Bristol Company -Lord Roberts Speaks on Defence Problem

LONDON, March 4.-An important cement bearing on the possi-of the aeroplanes in war was the effect that the company had accepted an order for eight "Bristol" tinental powers, and that others were to be purchased in the event of cerain severe tests being satisfactorily resting announcement came soon after some remarks from Sir Howell Davies, one of the members for Bristol, who mentioned that, in the course of a conservation with Mr. Haldane, the Secretary of State for War expressed the belief that the War Office be found purchasing aeroplanes for army purposes. Sir Howell Davies further passed the opinion of an eminent Russian writer, who had written that the greater the perfection in the weapons of war became, the greater prospect was there for peace, for the reason that the nations would be too afraid of the awful consequences of war.

Naturally Sir George White's announcement created immense interest among those who entertain an honest belief that the British government is not watching and encouraging aviation and showing an appreciation of its possibilities as it should do. It was understood that the nation he has in mind was one of the Triple Entente. This view was not wide of the mark, as on a correspondent asking Sir George White if he had any objection to mentioning the name of the power, he, after some hesitation on the question of courtesy, felt himself at liberty to announce that the eight "Bristols" had been purchased for the Russian army. They repre sent an approximate out av of $40.000. and it is worth while considering that this money is not coming out of the Russian national excheaquer, but is part of a substantial fund which has been subscribed by rich and patriotic Russians, who realize that the aeroplane, if only because of its usefulness for spying and reconnoitering

The people could not believe that this force would ever be required to defend their country from invasion, for if they did it was impossible that they would be content to entrust such a supreme duty to less than 260,000 untrained men and officers. He confessed that that feeling of security astonished him. It was a false security, and could only be felt by people who were either too apathetic to inquire what was going on in the world around them or were ignorant of the changes that were taking place.
