THE LOCAL HOUSE.

"the Mercer Matter Up Again-Busines Moving Slowly.

At the morning session of the house yes erday Mr. Hammell moved for an orde f the house for a return of a statement of he total vaine of the Mercer estate, dis

inguishing between real and persona

roperty. A statement of all payments ade to Andrew Mercer, the younger, o og his behalf, on account thereof. Also all correspondence between the said Andrew Mercer, the younger, or his solicitor, and the attorney-general, or any memher or officer of the government since Jan. 1, 1883.

The mover wished this information s that he could see whether Mercer, the younger, had been fairly treated. He understood that the annual income of $1500 interest on the $25,000 had not been paid. The young man was at present harassed by creditors, and as he had a wife and six children to support by the results of his own industry, he thought the house should not withhold the annuity granted him.

Mr. Mowat was willing that the resolution should pass, and briefly defended his conduct towards the claimant for the estates. He believed young Mercer had been treated in a liberal manner. He did not doubt that he was in debt. The young man would be in debt if he had half a milion in his own right. He had squandered 30,000 in one year and scemel, Mr. Mowat added, sorrowfully, "to have no notion whatever of taking care of money." The annuity had been retained on account of the litigation, but would be paid regularly as soon as the question was definitely settied. Mr. Creighton had been seeking inspira-tion from blue books during Mr. Mowat's speech, and arose to demolish the arguments of his chief adversary. He be-lieved it was a stain upon the escutcheon of Ontario that Mercer had been deprived of the money to which he was legally en-titled. The government had acted in a niggardly manner towards young Mercer. He asked the attorney-general if he had taken out a license as a pawnbroker. When young 'Mercer had pawned his watch during his illness to meet creditor's clains, Mr. Mowat had lent him $200 to redeem it on the understanding that redeem it on the understanding that young Mercer was to return the chronoeter to the custody of the provincial

A chorus of hisses here inter-rupted the speaker, who, however, con-tinoed his attack, and wound up by assert-ing that Mr. Mowat had bought up the late Mr. Mercer's fuaniture at an auction sale and stored it in the parliament buildings. The premier explained that he had done this at the request of young Mercer, and also asserted that judgment against the claimant would more than consume the arrears of annuity now in the hands of the covernment

Mr. Fraser stated that if the young man did not drop the warfare in the house it would be necessary for the government in self-defence to publish a brief history showing what sort of person he really was.
