

much neglected by the general medical practitioner that many are sacrificed yearly through ignorance of where to obtain skilled advice. The most eminent medical authorities say that there is no disease to which so many are subjected and from the effects of which so many constitutions break down, leaving the mind confused and finally chaotic or idiotic. The insane asylum or an early grave closes the scene.

We leave it to our readers if it is not a noble task we have undertaken—that of restoring those suffering as above to health and strength, and we have confidence derived from long experience that we can do so. We only ask of our patients that they will follow our directions STRICTLY and take the medicines REGULARLY. We have spoken before of difficulties in our way: First, sufferers are often too impatient to be cured, thinking that they ought to find immediate relief, forgetting that the disease has been in existence for years, and in many cases health and strength have never been experienced. The fact is that Nervous Debility cannot be quickly cured, it is against the nature of things to
