The large decrease in the amount of building and the number of permits taken out in London in 1917 as compared with 1916 could not be attributed to any profiteering on the part of the contractors, according to A. C. Nobbs, the retiring president of the Builders' Exchange, in his report to the exchange on the year's work. To substantiate his statement he cited the fact that while labor has gone up 15 per cent and materials from 59 per cent up, con-

The arrest of young Bowron was made by County Constable Alex. Shaver, acting under instructions from high Constable Ben Watterworth, who had been requested to apprehend Bowron. The records of the deputy registrar showed that young Bowron had not reported for service, and also failed istered letter from the deputy registrar, which would notify him of the day his case was to be tried. The letter, they claim, was never received, and upon inquiry they were told to wait. They were still waiting for the letter when the son was arrested.

In view of the circumstances, they are making an effort to get a hearing for their son before the tribunal. Young Bowron is at Queen's Park, and was to have been put in uniform today.

Come to City to Take Up the

The nature of wounds received in action frequently calls for transfusions of blood being made. Sergt. Cooper states that from day to day volunteers from among the slightly wounded men are asked to give their blood in order to save the life of a comrade. Despite the fact that they are themselves wounded, the inmates of the hospital are ever ready to sacrifice a portion of their blood for the benefit of a more seriously wounded man. Cases where a man is furnished with a practically new face after having his face trar showed that young Bowron had not reported for service, and also failed to disclose any information showing he had been before an exemption tribunal. Acting on this information, the military authorities requested the civil authorities to effect Bowron's arrest. The parents, on arrival in the city to-day, related their side of the story. The The parents, on arrival in the city to-day, related their side of the story. The son they said was 22 years of age, and when the proclamation was issued he came to the city and was examined. When placed in A2 Category he pro-cured an exemption form, the parents cialm, at the local postoffice and laid where a man is furnished with a practically new face after having his face blown off by a shell are becoming increasingly common, the writer asserts. Referring to one case which came under his notice, Serst, Cooper states that a man with his face made utterly unrecognizable, through the bursting of a high explosive shell, is now a fairly presentable looking person. English doctors, benefitting from cases of a similar nature, grafted the flesh of the man's arm onto his head. A nose and lips were grown onto his mangled face and by a gradual process which required one year of treatment the man was able to leave the hospital not so handsome as he was when first joincialm, at the local postoffice and laid claim to exemption on the grounds that in the interests of greater production he was needed on the 143-acre farm that he and his father worked. The father stated today it would practically be impossible to handle all the work alone on a farm of that size, particularly in view of the fact that at times he was not in the best of health.

The question of applying for exemption for the son was considered from every angle, they said, before he signed a claim for exemption sheet.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowron both claim that for days their son watched for the registered letter from the deputy registrar, which would notify him of the day his was able to leave the nospital not so handsome as he was when first joining the army, but fairly presentable. Sergt. Cooper was employed in London as an office clerk before signing up under Lieut.-Col. Edwin Seaborn, commanding officer of No. 10 Stationary Hospital.

Commenting on after-the-war condiary Hospital.

Commenting on after-the-war conditions in this country, he says it will require great perseverance and much action on the part of the Government to re-adjust things as in ante-belium days. The writer asserts that the Canadian boys will find it difficult to resume their former occupations.

To Get Firewood

Many An Owner's Pride Sacrificed To Offset Empty

That classic admonition, "Woodman, spare the tree," is not being heard in London, the Forest city of Canada, these days, about that many of the old trees have had the ignominious fate of being hewn down for firewood. The utilities commission, through its parks department, has taken out many old and decaying trees on boulevards and streets and had the wood cut and sawn to meet the pressing demand for fuel. In countless other instances, how ever, trees on private property have been felled to meet the demands of fur-nace and stove doors, which yawn like the hungry maw of a sacrificial god for trees which have probably stood for a

Development of the South London district meant the cutting through of new streets and the erection of new homes, and now only a few of the old trees are left. A score and more of the old trees, some of them at least a century old, have been felled during the past few weeks. Others This particular spot is just one of the
