Running water is best, but in any case wash and souse up and down until tolerably free from chinging matter, then let soak for 12 clinging matter, then let soak for 12 hours, changing the water twice. Make a kettle of strong lye water, using the concentrated lye. Cut the tripe in convenient sized pieces, drop a few at a time in the boiling lye and boil about six minutes. Lift out, lay on a board and scrape well with a sharp knife until the brown lining is removed and the meat is clean and whits. Wash thoroly, let stand in weak salt and water for two days, then boil in slightly salted water until tender. This will take six hours or more. It is then six hours or more. It is then ady to use in many other ways,
