NEW BRUNSWICK MAN DEAD IN BANGOR William Hale, one of the oldest residents of Bangor, died on Monday at the age of 91 years. Mr. Hale was born in Ireland, coming to New Brunswick when he was 15 years of age. He moved some 10 years ago to Bangor where he has since resided. Mr. Hale was remarkably well preserved and retained his faculties to the last. He had an excellent memory and chatted most interestingly of matters that happened some 60 or 70 years ago. He recalled very clearly the events of the bloodless Arrostook war and had a somewhat personal knowledge thereof as he worked for the engineers who established the boundary line between the United States and New Brunswick under the Ashburton treaty. In his early days Mr. Hale worked as a woods boss and as a boss stevedore on Bangor wharves, including a position as head dock man for James Walker & Co. For a period of 21 years he was fish warden of the Bangor salmon ponds and was well known to the older local fishermen. He retired from that position some 15 years ago.

FOUND GARNETS IN SEWER EXCAVATIONS Mayor Frink has several fine specimens of garnets which he picked up near the scene of the sewerage excavation operations in Adelaide road. The garnets are very pretty in coloring and Dr. Matthews, to whom they were shown, said they were fine specimens. They are embedded in a larger mass of felspar, which was blown from one of the veins of rock through which a trench was being dug. His worship has not yet had time to have the specimens properly mounted but it is likely that they will be among the decorations of the mayor's office for some time to come.
