YAMAZAKI

By OCTAVIA ROBERTS.

On the first evening the new man servant assumed control and stamped the dinner of Nora's preparation with his decorative genius, the homely, wholesome food she cooked to perfection was barely recognizable in amazing garnishes. Their youthful delight reached its climax when the Van Vortses dropped in upon them before the dinner's conclusion.

The Van Vortses, young married people on the block below, exercised, as Nora had recognized, a peculiar fascination and influence over the simpler Westons. Weston generously acknowledged that Van Vort, a wiry, brilliant young fellow, had been born to luck and fame. At twenty-five he had patented inventions that gave him a small income. With this income he dabbled in stocks, and according to their rise or fall, his wife's glory increased or waned. Van Vort's spectacular success discouraged Weston's plodding. Kitty Van Vort's motor car, vermillion machine (these glories were at present in the ascendant) filled Ethel Weston with an eager desire for a more ambitious establishment.

Tonight for the first time she felt, in their presence, a pride and satisfaction in her new home. The evening was marked for her with a sense of pleasant importance. She referred three times to "my butter."

It was perhaps ten o'clock just as their neighbors were about to depart that sounds of dragging weights, falling metal and angry voices caught their attention. With one accord the little group rushed to the kitchen, expecting gay with lights.

In a high white cap and an immense white apron that covered his diminutive frame, J. Yamazaki stood amid a scene of indescribable confusion. Pots and pans lay upon tables and chairs in piles, boxes freshly labeled stood upon a new shelf he had nailed at an unaccustomed point. The kitchen floor was still wet from his scrubbing. In the doorway Nora loomed majestically in a wonderful spotted wrapper, her hair in curlers sprang fearfully from her brow. She brandished her fist in his face. "Ye wretched little haythin, what ye doin' to my kitchen, what ye doin', answer me that!"

She edged him by the shoulders, but with a deft twist he glided under her arm and lightly sprang upon the table. "All tams I arrange kitchen, Japanese boy am not work lak Melion gell, all tams arrange."

"Well, I'll arrange you, pullin' all m' pans and kettles about. Where ye goin' with that basket full of tin?"

"I put him down collar. No good, no good for use, I'll cook without him."

"You'll cook without me then. Look-a-there! takin' off my old cook book! I never seen the beat! What's these haythin signs on my jars? There'll no hock come to a Christian house with them around."

At this point Trevor Weston burst in through the outer door. He glowered indignantly at old Nora. "Go to bed at once, Nora, Yamazaki is systemizing the kitchen. I'm glad to have it done." He turned to the little man in approval. "The blacking mites are in the hall. I'll leave my boots there for you to polish."

The little man nodded short: "Gell work," he struggled with his English. "Melion gells work, not buttle. Japanese boy? No, Melion gell? Yes. The black boots, 'ya mam."

At this decision Nora burst into a loud wall and covered her head with her apron.

"To think I should see the day," she sobbed, "that my pretty lamb would set me to black the shoes of a haythin Chinnee," and in spite of the explanations and denials of the entire assembly, she plodded desolately to bed, turning a deaf ear to the little bride's excited apology.

Yamazaki meanwhile in his high white cap blinked unmoved in the center of the demolished kitchen. Heedless gells black boots, all tams do that," he persisted, "tells wait on buttle, tings he say do, she do. Tams he says, she do, lak dat. 'Ya mam."

But Mrs. Weston had swooned again. Her very life indeed, quite beyond recovery, Yamazaki's heartlessness, while the blur of nurse and doctor and her own agitated family that shadowed the next few days of magnificent scenic setting and demanding the highest plane of the actor's art. No ordinary playgoers were entranced by the portrayal of the characters contained in the story, but such world-eminent people as Mrs. Bartlett, MM Albert Lambert, Delany and Paul Mounet of the great Comedie Francaise, Paris, take the leading roles, supported by a large and efficient company. The legend of the long-lost Grecian warrior is quite familiar to many, but told again under such grand conditions takes on a new light. There will be other pictures in lighter vein and by special request Mr. Harry Bennett is going to sing "The Wedding O' Sandy McNaab" with its irresistible monologue, Miss Edwards and Mr. Fletcher, Ottawa, Indian head-world and pottery, from Mrs. John R. Wilson, head bracelet made about 1890, by the mother of Wm. Carman, Esq. of Fredericton, from Miss Amy V. Carman; and a large number of exchanges from other societies and Kirby's text book of Ontario history from Wm. H. Mowatt.

Dr. Geo. F. Matthews read an interesting paper on the Phosphate Beds of South Carolina and also referred to several places in New Brunswick where this material is found. The lecturer's account of his trip to the south, his studies and investigations with reference to the beds and to the mode of treatment of the material were highly instructive.

Dr. Matthews also read another paper explaining the structure, etc., of a number of fossil plants described by Sir Wm. Dawson and which are found in the immediate vicinity of St. John, such as the fern ledges, Duck Cove and the Barrack Point, and by the use of illustrations and the reflectoscope, showed many previously supposed ferns to have fern-like foliage, but which fruited like a Cycad.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Dr. Matthews for his interesting papers.

AMUSEMENTS.

FRANKIE CARPENTER COMPANY.

Opening a two weeks' engagement at the Opera House with a matinee Easter Monday. As the press and public have claimed in cities visited by this company this season, it is one of the best and most complete on the road. The company is a large one and every one in it can do something besides stand around the stage. Frankie Carpenter herself in a charming little body brim full of fun, mirth and vivaciousness. During the week she will play a varied round of parts which will give her ample opportunity to display her versatility. Jere Grady full of humor and yet equal to the occasion when strange scenes present themselves, plays his parts with a realism rarely seen in performances at popular prices. The vaudeville programme is headed by that little man with the big specialty, Billy Rhodes.

NICKEL'S PICTURE AN ART GEM.

Today at the Nickel there will be a film production that for artistic worth is so far without parallel in this city's entertainment history. It is another of Pathe Freres' wonderful film d'art pictures, "The Return of Ulysses," a Greek legendary story of magnificent scenic setting and demanding the highest plane of the actor's art. No ordinary playgoers were entranced by the portrayal of the characters contained in the story, but such world-eminent people as Mrs. Bartlett, MM Albert Lambert, Delany and Paul Mounet of the great Comedie Francaise, Paris, take the leading roles, supported by a large and efficient company. The legend of the long-lost Grecian warrior is quite familiar to many, but told again under such grand conditions takes on a new light. Carman; and a large number of exchanges from other societies and Kirby's text book of Ontario history from Wm. H. Mowatt.

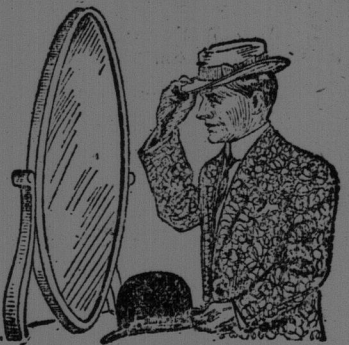

REFINED IRISH COMEDIANS AT THE PRINCESS.

Owing to Carrino and her bear falling to make railroad connection it will be impossible for them to appear until tomorrow. So the Princess management have secured Dennis Kelly, Ireland's favorite comedian, who will appear this afternoon and evening in Irish songs and dances. This is one of the most high-class of all Irish acts. It is not one of those cheap acts and the man does not dress as a monkey, but as an Irish gentleman would. He is a past-master in the art of singing and his Irish dances are a feature. Today there is a complete change of pictures, five in number, and a new ballet by T. A. B. Waterfall. Be early.

Squire never realized what a little fellow Murgine is until last night. "Vicar—how did it happen to occur to you then?"

Squire—I overheard a woman say that he was every inch a gentleman.

A boy went into a baker's shop for a three-penny loaf. Thinking that the loaf was rather small he remarked to the baker, smilingly, "That's a very nice loaf, but it's so heavy to carry."

"All right," said the boy, putting two pence-halfpenny on the counter and walking to the door.

The baker called after him: "There, boy, I want another half-penny. I have only two-pence-halfpenny."

"Never mind that," said the boy; "it will be less for you to count."
