"That's where most of the high hats go," explained the young man as the horsey person walked proudly out of the place wearing his old topper. We can get rid of any number of them that way. It doesn't matter much how old or in what condition they may be, so long as the coachman out of work can sport a high hat he feels he is dressed for the part, and he goes after a job with his head holding the hat straight and high,

"We have a lot of chaps coming in for high hats who are not out of work, but who are too poor to buy a high that. Cabmen think they stand a better chance if they are got up in the conventional rig, and as a high lat is part of this they come here and get fitted with a stovepipe from the stock we have on the shelves.
