Wedding Ring By Bertha M. Clay

"I would tell you if it were so, duchess" said Leah, "I look happy because—well, because I am happy. Have you ever seen a sky so blue, the earth so fair? Do the birds ever sing as they sing this morning? Where the earth so fair? Do the birds ever sing as they sing this morning? Where the the flowers ever so sweet? Something—I do not know what it is—something—I do not know what it is—something—I do not know what it is—something—I to not know what it is—something has occurred which seems to have brought me unutterable happiness".

"It is worse even than I thought", remarked the duchess. "Come and take this chair. Let us talk prose, not poetry, and decide upon what we can do to amuse your young neighbor. I like him, Leah. I shall not rest until he melancholy has left his face, and I see the brightness that belongs to youth shining there".

CHAPTER XVIII.

The day passed, as the days always o, whether they be shortened by appiness or lengthened by sorrow, att. Leah Hatton kept no account of he hours. All that was taking place was a dream to her; the only effort she could make was to prevent other people from guessing her secret. she could make was to prevent other becople from guessing her secret. He had come—the fairy prince who was to wake her from her long sleep; but the world need not knowit—must not know it. It would think her mad—this wary, keen, wise old world that laughs at the sweet follies of youth. She had surrendered her mind to a host of beautiful but unreal fancies; they had made the brightest part of her life. To any other than herself they would have seemed absurd; yet she had firm faith in them. She believed in this ideal lover of hers, who was looking for her fin the world just as she was waiting for him. She had nursed herself in the belief that she would recognize him the moment she saw bifn, and it seemed to her that she had done so.

him, and it seemed to her that she had done so.

Hundreds of handsoma faces had passed before her eyes, but not one had touched her heart until now. When she saw Sir Basil's she recognized it; a strange magnetic influence seemed to come over her in the depths of her heart she said to herself "I have met my fate". But now she must hide her secret, lest the laughing wicked world should be amused by it. She never tought of Sir Basil's part in the matter whether he share her feelings and fancies; she was too much engrossed with her own.

The day went on, and she spent a most every more to it with him a lovely day, that grow brighter and fairer with every hour that passed.

That evening she stood in her dressing-room, the pretty Parisian maid looking at her in something like wonder. Miss Hatton had most exquisite taste, and liked always to be well dressed; but this evening it seemed as if it were timpossible to rlease her. Dress after dress said. ... as superb set of rubies and pearls were not pleasing to her. On the toilet table, intermixed with crystal and silver and richly cut Bohemian glass, were some clusters of scarlet passion flowers. She would wear them, and not the jewels.

The Parisienne sighed. They would look very beautiful, but they would give her an immense deal of trouble. Leah, had a fancy that she woull like to be dressed after the fashion o her picture; but the black velve looked too warm and heavy for this bright summer night. At last she chose a dress of white shining silk, soft and fine, and with it she worn orbing but passion-flowers. They crowned her dark beautiful head, an glowed like flar gainst her white neck: great trainers against her white heads of her the search of the folds of her the search of the fo

The sixth of August", she said to herself; "I shall never forget the date. I have been in the world twenty-two-years, but I have never lived until to-day."

HILE stooping near the stove I caught the handle of a pan of boiling water and upset it." writes Mrs. Albert Smart, of 279 Harbison Ave., Winnipeg. "The entire contents of the pan poured partly down my arm, but mostly over my entire contents of the pan poured partly down my arm, but mostly over my foot, and as I was wearing slippers at the time my foot was very badly scalded! A large blister covered the whole top of my foot and the pain I suffered was intense. We had heard how good Zam-Buk is for such injuries, so my husband got some and applied it. The first application soon gave me wonderful relief from the burning pain, and continued applications completely cured the scald. After this demonstration of the value of Zam-Buk we are now never without a box in the house. We have proved it invaluable for the many little accidents which are of such frequent occurrence in every home.

Zam-Buk is just as effective for skin diseases, such as eczema, salt rheum and ulcers, and is without equal for piles. In many cases where the disease or sore is of long standing and other remedies have been useless, Zam-Buk has worked a complete and permanent cure. Its absolute purity makes it suitable for the most tender skin (even the skin of a young baby) and mothers should always keep a box on hand for emergencies. Zam-Buk does not deteriorate with keeping.
