. THE Anti-Protectionists of London, England, gave a grand banquet, the other evening, to Hon. Mr. Wilson, the father of the present United States Tariff. A number of notables were present, one of the sentiments expressed being that "the American nation had bidden a final adieu to protection." The guest of the evening thus expressed himself in the course of an extended speech: "The protectionists of the United States had built up no defences to keep the people of Great Britain and others from competing with their home markets, but the tariff reformers were now tearing down those defences in order to let themselves out so that they may compete with the British in other markets. The future would prove that the manufacturing supremacy of the world would go to the people who had the largest supply of the basic material and industry and the cheapest access thereto, and who also applied the highest intelligence to their manufactures."
