Stranger Things Have Happened

According to the story told by a Mrs. Taylor, of New York, a relative of Sir Hector Macdonald, who is generally supposed to have committed suicide in Paris after the Boer war, is now figuring before the world in the person of General Brusiloff, the famous Russian commander. If this lady is to be credited Sir Hector is still alive and the fact is well known to cousins of his living in London, New York, Canada and Australia, the reports set afloat at the time of his alleged suicide in Paris and burial at Edinburgh were all make-believe, and that General Brusiloff, whose previous history is dark and upon the extraordinary circumstances connected with whose sudden rise to supreme Russian command there is a good deal of comment, is no other than Sir Hector in the flesh.

It will be recalled that in 1903, Sir Hector, who was then a brigadier-general of the British Army and had greatly distinguished himself in South Africa, was charged with immoral conduct in Ceylon. He pleaded his entire innocence, but was ordered back to Ceylon to be tried by court martial. He started on the journey, but got no farther than Paris, where he was reported to have shot himself.

On the contrary, it is now claimed that all the story of his suicide and burial was pure fiction and that, instead of going to Ceylon, he went to Japan, and, during the Russo-Japanese war, was recognized as the daring leader of the Japanese at Port Arthur.

At all events, according to the report circulated, all Sir Hector's relatives are now certain that, under a new name, he is the man who is today known as General Brusiloff in the Russian service. Moreover, it is said that the photographs of Brusiloff and

Redfield Gets After Roosevelt

CAMDEN, N.J., Oct. 17—Praise for the Democratic Administration for disapproving the proposed six-power loan to China and for the establishment of commercial attaches abroad to promote the foreign trade of this country, a defense of the Adamson eight-hour law, and an attack on the battle Creek (Mich.) speech of Theodore Roosevelt made up the substance of the address delivered here tonight by William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. Redfield put the query as to whether Charles Evans Hughes endorsed the Battle Creek speech, from which he quoted the declaration of Mr. Roosevelt that he would have seized every interned German ship if he had been President at the time of the sinking of the Lusitania.

"It means," he said, "that Mr. Roosevelt would have seized private property to indemnify a public wrong, that he would without notice have committed an act of war with its necessary results, and that he would have broken a treaty between this country and Germany under which in case of war between the two countries the private property of the citizens of both is to be free from seizure for nine months after the war shall break out."

"I cannot refrain from asking Mr. Hughes whether he approves this statement of Mr. Roosevelt. Would Mr. Hughes, without inquiry and notice, have seized the private property of German citizens in reprisal for the sinking of the Lusitania? The American people, to whom he looks for support, whom he asks to place him in the position where he might have the power to do such things, have the right to know."

Sir Hector show a strong resemblance and that they are both small, stocky built men.

Truth is often stranger than fiction.

A Race With a Zeppelin

The experiences of Lieutenant Red H. Mulock, a Canadian pilot, who "rambled around" in the clouds, 9,500 feet up, looking for a Zeppelin he had pursued from the coast of England, are told in a letter published in the current issue of Flying. He was the first pilot to succeed in chasing a Zeppelin at night, picking his quarry up over Hantsdale. For military reasons the censor has deleted the other names of localities, overlooking, however, the mention of the coast of Belgium. After describing the first appearance of the Zeppelin, Mulock continues:

"It was in the middle of the night—a little after 1 a.m.—and no moon, very dark, with clouds around, and the stars so dark you could not see the horizon. He passed over here, about 2,000 feet up, and by the time he got to—I was up even with him and to seaward. I then changed my course straight for him. He had stopped to drop his bombs on —, and with his engine shut down, heard me coming, and, of course, as soon as he heard me, looked in my direction and must have seen the flames from my exhaust.

"Anyway, he did not wait to throw any more bombs, and I saw the most wonderful sight. I was about 1,500 feet from him. He opened fire with Maxim's, but without effect, and majestically struck his nose up and went up like a balloon. He was then higher than I, so I opened out again and tried to round him back of —, where we both turned out to sea and steered about east. I chased him up to 8,000 feet and over to the Belgian coast, and we both changed courses to south-east, and a little later went into the clouds together over —.

"Having lost him in the clouds, I climbed to 9,500 feet, and rambled around looking for him. But he had gone. There were two of them; one was given a warm reception by the chaps at —, while the other one and started for home."

How War Effects Worlds Trade

Interesting figures as to how the war has affected business in the principal belligerent and neutral lands appear in a report prepared by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for Senator Simmons, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance. The countries covered are the United States, Canada, England, France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Italy, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Argentina, Brazil, Australia, British India, British South Africa, Egypt, and Japan. The following general conclusions are drawn:

Business activities were fairly normal in the various countries of the world during the two years preceding the outbreak of the war.

In every country, including the United States, there was a decided decline in business activity after July, 1914.

The period of business depression following the outbreak of the war lasted from four to six months in most of the neutral countries. In the belligerent countries the upward trend did not begin until the last few months in 1915.

There was a slight depression in business activity in the United States in the latter part of 1913 and early in 1914, but in the Spring and Summer of 1914 there were signs of recovery. The outbreak of the war, however, caused a decided decline.

The United States at the close of the period, April, 1916, had entered upon a period of business activity which has had no parallel in the history of the country.

I had a picnic all to ourselves. He ran away so fast that I could not keep up with him and climb at the same time. I waited around for him, but no Zep appeared; evidently, he stopped his engines and listened for me, and then went off in another direction. There was no use waiting, so I chaps at —, while the other one and started for home."
