A TALE OF WOMAN'S LOVE AND WOMAN'S PERFDY

"Most dreadful case, Mr. Locke," he said gloomily. "I can't believe yet that it's true—I mean, sir, that anything of the kind has happened." "It is hard to believe, yes," assented Gerald, looking at the ground that the man might not see his despondency.

fools expected to see I can't imagine. They just came and stared at the bridge and the stream as if they expected to have the victim who had apparently played even for them, or the dead man's ghost, Ed go with you, but I'm waiting for the head keeper, Dave. Everything seems at sixes and sevens. Two of the under keepers gave notice this morning. There is nothing I can do for the marquis, I suppose, Mr. Locke?"

BOYS OF TO-DAY Will be the Men of the Future

They should be stugged and sturdy, Full of Life and Steady for Work, Play or Study—Keep Them Healthy Growing boys should always be healthy and rugged. Ready for play, ready for study, and ready at any time for a hearty meal. This condition denotes good health, but there are entirely too many who do not come up to this standard. They take no part in the many games all healthy boys indulge in; they are stooped, shrunken, dull and listless; they complain of nervous headaches, and their appetite is variable.

WHY INDIANS LOVE THUNDER.

Among some tribes of Indians the thunder is held in great reverence; they sing songs to it, and have dances in its honor. As a reason for doing this they tell the following story: Once upon a time three young men were on the war path from their homes, when the youngest of them had the misfortune to break his leg. By Indian law it became the duty of the other two warriors to carry the youth safely to his home. So they made a rude litter and carried him on it until they became tired.

and ran faster and faster, but the thunder rumbled nearer and nearer. Then the old man assumed his proper shape of a huge porcupine, and went scampering away, shooting his quills out behind him as he ran. But the thunder followed him with peal after peal until, finally, a bolt of lightning struck him and destroyed him. Then the three Thunderers appeared again and said to the youth: "Now that our work here is done we will carry you home to your mother, who has been grieving for you all the time!"

Linguistic Laziness. The laziest of all laziness, says Herbert W. Horwill in the Critic, is the practice of coining unnecessary new words. It might have been supposed, that when there is already in existence a word which exactly denotes the idea to be expressed, it would be easier to fall back upon this word than to invent another. In fact, however, it often requires less effort to construct a linguistic monstrosity than to find the term that has been consigned by good usage. Take, for instance, such words as extinguishment, revelation, withdrawal, devotion, denotement and statement. It is not difficult to trace the mental processes. The word, extinguish, was in the speaker's mind. He wanted a noun, and to stick "ment" on to the verb was an expedient nearer to hand than the search for "extinguishment. Occasionally the mental changes in the construction of the verb. When a man says, "to administer," we may be sure that he first thought of "administration," and that he was then in too great a hurry to notice that the analogy with such pairs as celebrate and celebration, would mislead him. I one were making a collection of linguistic curios, one might add to it such phrases as reminiscence, affirmation, elenchage, reminiscence, movement, less, traditional, islestric, unsympathy, and bishoply. In the mind of the offender there seems almost to be lurking a kind of predatory false analogy which grabs at the expression and distorts them before he can help himself.
