THE PRINCE TOWN.
When the most benefit is to be derived from a good medicine, it is early in the year. This is the season when the tired body, weakened organs and nervous system yearn for a building-up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. Many wait for the spring weather and, in fact, delay giving attention to their physical condition. It is long that a long stage of sickness is inevitable. To rid the system of the impurities accumulated during the winter season, to purify the blood and to invigorate the whole system, there is nothing so good as Hood's Sarsaparilla. Don't put it off, but take Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will do you good. Read the testimonials published in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla, all from reliable, grateful people. They tell the story.

A COMMISSIONER IN B. R.
Gentlemen—Having used Hagar's Pectoral Balm in our family for years I have no hesitation in saying that it beats every other thing we ever tried for coughs and colds in children as well as grown up people. It relieves that tight binding sensation in the chest. We would not be without it for anything, as we have a large family.

(Sacred Heart Review.)

The Superior of the Marianon Hospital in West, a city of Prussia, has lately died, and has been buried at the expense of the city. She was a Sister of Charity, and had served this hospital without interruption since 1869. The mayor, in his warm eulogy, said: "Her unceasing labor in behalf of the sick and poor, irrespective of creed, has won for her the undying affection and gratitude of the whole city, where her very presence was a benediction. In testimony of its indebtedness to this noble woman, the city of West prays for the privilege of defraying all the funeral expenses of its benefactress."

The school for the study of Christian art, established in Kewlar, by the artist Stummel, is the only one of its kind in Germany. After years of study in the "Dusseldorf Academy," under Deger, Muller and Von Gebhardt, he spent many years in the independent study of ancient and medieval art. His recent mural decoration of the Sacred Heart chapel in the Luxembourg cathedral is a noble example of his work—grand in conception and drawing, superb in color. In Kewlar he has decorated the Mercy and Confession chapels as well as the Joseph and Antony choir in the Marienkirche. Nor is his enthusiasm for art confined to painting. In other branches of the fine arts—in sculpture and in glass painting, in the textile arts, and in art embroideries, in metal work, and in ceramics he has also designed more or less. During his long stay in Italy he became deeply interested in mosaic work, and the fruits of this study are shown in the floor of the Mercy chapel. The pavement of the whole Marienkirche is to be re-laid in the same manner.

Father Sveinsson, S. J., has discovered, in his Iceland mission, a precious relic of the last Catholic Bishop of that country. "Last summer," he writes, "I made a trip to Iceland. On reaching Reikiavik it occurred to me that I should like to see the Lutheran cathedral. My clericone, after showing me the church, took me to a little room near the entrance. Here he opened a cupboard and drew forth a cope of marvellous richness and beauty, but so very dilapidated that it was nearly falling to pieces. I began to examine it. Could I be mistaken? Here were the figures of saints wonderfully embroidered in gold on a groundwork of red silk, all in the most exquisitely artistic taste. The acroastion said that this cope was sent by the Pope in the year 1550, or thereabouts, to Jan Arsson, the last martyred Catholic bishop of Iceland. 'But of what use can it be here?' I asked. 'It is only used once a year,' he replied, 'when our bishop ordains a new minister. Then he puts it on, sometime, during the ceremony. It has been the custom from time immemorial.' It was rather interesting to see with what respect this ancient cope, the gift of a Pope, has been preserved by these Protestants. But our present Holy Father is sending to Iceland a much more precious gift than any number of vestments. He has ordered the vicar-apostolic of Denmark, Monsignor d'Erch, to establish a mission in Reikiavik, and in the autumn two priests from Copenhagen will be sent to preach the same faith for which Jan Arsson suffered death."

There are fifty-four corporations of Catholic students in Germany. It is at the University of Bonn, and in the cities of Berlin and Munich, that these unions originated. The Bavaris, in Bonn, was the first to see the light. This was in 1844. The Zeasnia came in the year 1851, and two years later the Assania was inaugurated in Berlin. Within a few months afterwards the Unitas was established in Bonn. Other clubs came later. The Bavaris and Zeasnia were united in the beginning, but disensions unfortunately brought about their separation in 1885. These fifty-four bodies are divided into five associations. The association called the Verein is the most important. It is, numerically the strongest, being composed of twenty-six societies, and everything leads one to believe that it has a brilliant future before it. The most eminent men of Catholic Germany have belonged to this association—Windthorst, the two Reichstagsparter, Scholmer-Aist, the historian Janssen, and others. Its by-laws forbid its members to fight duels or to wear colors. "Religion, science, friendship" is its device. Once a year it meets in general assembly. Each society is represented by a delegate, who alone has the right to vote. Other members may be present and make speeches if they like. Two-thirds of the societies suffice to form a quorum. The president is chosen by the delegates. If the Catholic students of Germany lack the power to spread their faith, it must be admitted that they show no want of earnestness in manifesting it. At their last general assembly the Verein were urged to join the St. Vincent de Paul conference. Works of Christian charity exist among them, but they are far less numerous and on a smaller scale than in France.

Items of Interest to Catholic Readers.

(Sacred Heart Review.)

One of the most interesting, and at the same time instructive, articles in the current issue of the American Catholic Quarterly Review comes from the pen of Rev. Rouben Parsons, D. D., who has taken for his theme "Explorers in the Middle Age: Marco Polo." In a brief introduction to his paper, Doctor Parsons emphasizes in a few words the egregious error they labor under who consider the Middle Age as a period of darkness, and points out that in that epoch many of our most useful inventions and most prized institutions originated. His sketch of the three P's, the explorers of whom he writes, aims at showing that, long before the geographical conquests in those regions whose authors the world now honors were made, earlier travellers had made known the immense countries of eastern Asia, to which territories many Catholic missionaries were sent in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries by the Holy See. Notable among such missionaries the Doctor mentions Philip the physician, who was sent in 1177 by Pope Alexander III, to the "Priest-King" of Kairat; the Dominicans commissioned to Persia, in 1245, by Innocent IV, and the Franciscans whom the same Pontiff sent to the great Ghengis-Khan. He informs us that the Priest-King of Kairat, mentioned above, was in reality a priest, albeit a schismatic, having been ordained such by a Nestorian primate, and was recognized as a priest by Alexander III, who, in a letter addressed to the Priest-King and intrusted to Philip the physician, whom the Pope sent to Kairat in the capacity of apostolic delegate, says that he had learned of the King's desire to enter into communion with the Holy See and, therefore, sends him Philip, with authority to arrange matters. How this apostolic delegation was received, Doctor Parsons states, is not known, and he notes the fact that the last of the Priest-Kings of Kairat was conquered and killed in battle by Ghengis-Khan at the beginning of the thirteenth century.

In sketching the careers of the three medieval explorers who form the subjects of his paper, Doctor Parsons names first Nicolo and Maffeo Polo, who, about the middle of the thirteenth century, went to the Orient in quest of fortune. He follows them from Constantinople to the mouth of the Volga, thence over the deserts habitated by Tartar nomads to Bektars, from which place, at the invitation of an envoy of Kubli-Khan, grandson of the sovereign of the Mongol Tartars, they journeyed to Chansen-Fu. There the Grand Khan welcomed them, questioned them much about the Roman Pontiff and the organization of the Catholic Church, and when, twelve years later, they left his realm for home, he appointed them his ambassadors to the Holy See, charged them with various commissions to the Holy Father and begged them to see that missionaries were sent to his subjects, whom he said he could not civilize with the aid of the schismatic Nestorians or the Thibetan Dlamas gave him. It took the Polo more than three years to reach Italy, and, unfortunately, a vacancy in the Holy See then prevented them from executing the Khan's commissions. Desirous of returning to Kubli—and the concave being in no haste to elect a Pope—they started for Palestine, to lay the Khan's requests before Cardinal Visconti, then legate to that land, taking with them a son of Marco, aged about twenty years, who was destined to reveal to Europe, says the Doctor, the wonders of India, China and Japan. The three Polo had an interview with Cardinal Visconti at Jerusalem, and while that legate was negotiating for the execution of the Khan's desire, word came to him that he had been chosen Pope. As Gregory X, he commissioned the Carmelites to evangelize China; and having seen this mission arranged for, the Polo started for the Khan's court, where they were warmly welcomed, being offered to serve the sovereign gladly accepted. Doctor Parsons details, at length the travels and labors in the Khan's service of the three Europeans, who remained fifteen years in his realm, and started for home in a royal fleet, then sailed from the port of Zailon, in eastample, any merchant, lawyer, or newspaper publisher, and he will be rejoiced at the information he will receive. It will surprise a great many, no doubt, to be told that, were we to permit it, probably not more than one-third of those who receive the publisher's labor and money in the shape of this paper would pay for it. This is an alarming fact and one which, as it indicates a deadness of conscience with regard to this sin, we think those who have the care of souls should make a note of.

Cardinal Vaughan offers this solution of the school question in England: "It seems to me that this complex education problem may be solved, if we regard the matter, not at the point of altitude where it ramifies into differences, but at the common basis. That basis I take to be the newly-created right of each child to receive education at the cost of the State. Then let a certain sum be fixed as the normal and proper cost of educational maintenance per child in each district; let that sum follow the child from the public purse to whatever public elementary school the parents send him. The scale of cost should be settled either by the Education Department alone or in conjunction with school boards or other local authority, provided it be the same for all and paid from either taxes or rates or from both. We should thus secure in the basis perfect equality and respect for the natural law." Let the State make itself responsible for the education of every child, and so long as the State's standard of study is reached, let the child go to any school it likes. Then those parents who prefer the secular system of training could have it and those who choose the religious system could have it.—Catholic Review.

Although the Transvaal Catholics are not permitted by the law of that land to hold office, they number over four thousand, have a Prefect Apostolic, ten priests, a college, seven schools and orphanages and asylums of their own. Some of our American Catholic contemporaries are so bitter against Great Britain that they applaud the tyrant Kruger and his so-called "Free Republic."—True Witness.

Cardinal Vazary, Prince Primate of Hungary, has given a very fine illustration of how to use wealth in a Christian manner. He has donated one hundred thousand crowns for the foundation of a refuge for the poor at Keskely. The poor of that place will bless his name and be very reasonably expect a bountiful return for his generosity in the world to come.—Exchange.

The editor of La Croix proposes that all the priests of Paris shall unite in offering a garland, not of perishable flowers, but of Masses for the repose of the soul of Pasteur. Such would be the grandest and most beneficial tribute that could be paid to the memory of the great man of science.

The Antigonish Casket, referring to an extract in its columns from an article on the subject of "Dishonesty," published in the Chicago New World, makes the following comments, which we most heartily endorse and commend to the serious consideration of our readers: Comparatively few persons, we believe, are aware of the extent to which this great evil and serious sin prevails. That form of it which consists in the refusal or neglect to pay one's just debts is especially and alarmingly common, as all men engaged in business of any kind know. Experience proves that there is an extremely large proportion of men who, though they would shrink from stealing the property of another, will never pay a debt unless they are compelled to do so. The fact is so exceedingly strange that the proposition will be doubted by all honest people whose knowledge of the world in this respect is slight. But let such a person consult, for ex-
