Around the Clock With Silk

Morning, noon and night find silks on duty or dress parade. Every hour of the day is a time for some type of silk costume-from morning frocks to afternoon and evening gowns, and finally to night robes. The silk worm spins his cocoon around the clock, and from it every hour emerges a butterfly fashion. She flits about; lights here and there long enough to be seen, and to sip the nectar of the pleasure she seeks, then returns, to find a different garment wrought from the same source, and is off on another quest, repeating the changes from morn to night. Every woman who visited our silk show was impressed with these facts. If you have not had the opportunity of inspecting the largest gathering of new silks ever attempted by this store, we invite you to do so now.
