London's Mayor Must Be Sound On Public Ownership

The people of London are now owners of revenue-producing public utilities in which they have invested $12,000,000—the waterworks system, the hydro-electric power system, and the London and Port Stanley Railway. All are self-sustaining; made so by the work of Londoners, familiar with London's needs, whole-hearted believers in ownership by the people.

The people of London are now about to end the franchise of the London Street Railway Company; regain control of their streets, and establish a street railway that will be a credit to the city. The proposal of ALD. CHILDS' OP-PONENT WOULD BLOCK PUBLIC OWNERSHIP and GIVE THE COM-PANY AN automatic EXTENSION OF FRANCHISE until 1930. The COMPANY WENT once OVER THE HEADS OF THE PEOPLE to the Legislature for five-cent fares, and if it suits its purpose WILL DO SO AGAIN for still higher rates. Don't trust to a weak defender. Childs is neither disinterested, half-hearted nor antagonistic to public ownership and these great undertakings will be
