FOR HER ONLY

she faltered.
"Mistake. No, she writes all too plainly. Read for yourself," he said, extending the letter; then he drew it back and crushed it in his hand.
"No! No one shall see it but myself! I have been living in a fool's paradise.
Your uncle was right. She is a coquette," and his head dropped upon his breast.
"No, no, no!" said Alice. "Diana is no coquette, and you know it, Rom. Do not be hard and cruel! There is some mistake, some misunderstanding! If ever there was a true-hearted girl in this world Diana is one."
"What misunderstanding can there be?" he asked. "She said, then she stopped short. How had they parted? Could it be possible that Diana was jealous of Eva Delorme and that jealousy and not coldheartedness had driven her from him?"
"Ah," said Alice, watching his face, "you have thought of a reason, Rom?"
"No," he said, "it is impossible, and yet—" he paused and looked at his watch.
"You will go to her, Rom? Go at once! She is waiting for you. She has been waiting for you ever since she wrote that letter!" said Alice, eagerly.
He walked up and down the room in feverish excitement for a minute. Then he stopped and put his hand on her shoulder.
"There is just one chance, one hope for me," he said, hoarsely. "Yes, I will go to her. Say nothing to anybody! Leave me now!"
The train was at the station as he drove up, and he had barely time to get a ticket.
It was long walk from the station to Ross Farm, but it was a relief to him to stride along, instead of sitting in a crawling fly, and at every step of the road he rehearsed what he would say to her; what pleading words he would address to her; what arguments he would use to convince her of his love and devotion.
A hushed stillness seemed to settle over the farm and its surroundings. He was alone in sight, and he stopped for a moment with a feeling of dread upon him. Then he lifted the latch gently, and going up the narrow path, knocked at the door. After a minute or two he heard foot-steps, strongly muffled, and the tall figure of a man stood in the open doorway.
"My name is Leslie," said Farmer Dan, gravely. "Can I see Mr. Leslie?" he said. "What do you want? Come inside."
Lord Romney leaned his arm on the back of a chair.
"My name is Romney Leslie," he said. "A flush rose to Uncle Dan's wot face, and left it pale again.
"Lord Leslie!" he said. "Well, my lord?"
"Forgive me, sir, if I had hoped for a warmer welcome," he said, as firmly as he could. "I came to inquire for, to see Miss Leslie."
"Diana, my niece?" "You cannot see her. She is ill."
Lord Romney went white to the lips. This was the meaning of the strange hush and the quietude about the place.
"Ill?" he said. "Not dangerously. I hope!"
"Dan, gravely, his brow knit. "She Dan, dangerously," replied Uncle Leslie, hovering between life and death."
Lord Romney did not utter a word, but stood grasping the chair for support, great drops of sweat standing upon his brow.

KNOW HOW IS USUALLY CALLED LUCK.

And the person who accomplishes, without much fuss, or delay, or expense, or fretting, something which costs another person all of these in time, is called "lucky." For example, want advertisements are often called "lucky." Yet it's KNOWN HOW!

his head.
"Di did her own mind, her own heart best," he said firmly. "I have written to you in that way, there is no more to be said, my lord. I promised her faithfully that I would not let you go near her."
"She asked you to promise this?"
"I tell you sir, that I believed Diana stopped and turned his head aside, that the other might not be a witness of his anguish. There is some mystery," he said, at last, brokenly.
"What it is I cannot even guess. I tell you sir, that I believed Diana loved you. As there is a heaven above us, I believe it still! I know know of nothing that has happened that could work this change in her! For heaven's sake, help me, sir," and he stretched out his hand.
Farmer Dan looked at him for the first time with pitying eyes.
"I believe what you tell me, my lord," he said, solemnly. "I believe that what you say is true, but I cannot help you (How can I? If she says she will not see you, you cannot see her."

SCENTS FOR SACHET POWDERS.

Directions for Making Sweet Compounds.

When making sachet powders, the best quality of ingredients should be purchased for others, a so dilute they are not satisfactory, and the odor from them will not last, says the Montreal Star.

Heliotrope, one of the most delicate scents is made from one half pound of rose petals, dried, four ounces of tonka beans, powdered, one pound of powdered orris root, two ounces of vanilla bean, ground, and one drachm of musk. All must be worked into eight grains of bitter almond oil. This is done by blending the powders, and by degrees mixing them into the oil. Orris root alone is an excellent imitation of violet, and for a baby's garments and accessories is better than a heavier scent.

Violet is made from one ounce of powdered benzoin, two and one half grains musk, and oil of lemon, one eighth of an ounce of orange flowers, one half an ounce of powdered cassia, one ounce of rose petals, two ounces of powdered orris root, and two and one half grains of oil of bitter almond. This is mixed in the same way as the heliotrope.
It will be noticed that neither of the formulas contains the actual odor, but if the combination of elements is made as it should be the result will be violet or heliotrope.
Lavender sachet powder is inexpensive and pleasant. It is made from five ounces of dried lavender flowers reduced to powder, one and one half ounces of powdered benzoin, three ounces of cypress powder and three-quarters of a drachm of Mitcham oil of lavender.
Only a small quantity of any perfumed powder is required for a piece of fancy work, and the most satisfactory results will always be obtained by sprinkling wadding, should be split for such purpose, because if the cotton is too thick the odor will not escape.
Outer covering for these scents should always be of thin materials, such as silks, etc. Figured m-croized fabrics make excellent substitutes for silks.

When making sachet powders, the best quality of ingredients should be purchased for others, a so dilute they are not satisfactory, and the odor from them will not last, says the Montreal Star.

Silver Coin Famine.

Washington, July 4.—A famine of silver coins is threatened in the North Pacific States, and banks in Oregon, Washington and Montana are appealing to the Treasury Department to ship dimes, quarters and half dollars to relieve the situation. Congress has made no appropriation for transporting the coin, and Treasury officials say they cannot come to the relief unless Congress takes some action. The Treasury formerly paid for such transportation, but saves about $300,000 a year by not doing it now.

Blind Pigs Raided.

Wingham, July 4.—On the night of June 17, Provincial Constable Phippen, and assistants, surprised the local option town of Teeswater by swooping down on a couple of the hotels where he supposed liquor was being sold. The Vendome Hotel, managed by Jacob Lambartus, and his son was searched, liquor being found by the barrel; also one blind pig, owned by David Kaplan, was raided and a quantity of whisky was found.

Hand Shattered by Dynamite.

Ottawa, July 4.—P. Dallaire was fishing by the dynamite method in Brewery Creek, Hull, yesterday afternoon, when a stick of explosive went off in his hand. The member was horribly shattered and had to be cut off in the Ottawa Hospital, to which he was brought.

New Argentine Consul.

Ottawa, July 4.—Charles A. Gatarco, the new Argentine consul at Ottawa, will arrive on the sixth or seventh of July. H. Mayer, the present consul, receiving word to that effect yesterday, Mr. Mayer will sail for England on the 12th to join his family.

The Opera House is far cooler than walking the street. Why not come and enjoy yourselves.
