The play abounds in startling situations and through the whole is apparent the strong hand and genius of Bartley Campbell. The stage setting is elaborate and the tableaux well brought out. The persecutions of the Jewish quarter and the massacre of the Jewish quarter and the massacre of the Jewish quarter and the massacre of the strongest characters in the play is that of the strongest characters in the play is that of Sara, a daughter of David and Miss Eleanor Morrefti, who takes the part, is admirably adapted to the role. The part of Nicolai Niagoff, a student in love with the Jewess Sara, is also well sustained by Mr. Adolph Jackson, as is also that of his friend Ivan Nordoff, played by Mr. Chas. E. Gotthold. He is the lover of Marie, sister of Sara, and the role gives scope for a good deal of strong acting, Mr. Gotthold, however, does not overdo the part. The parts of Jaracoff, the Governor-General, and of Michael Sparta, a court interpreter, are well sustained and the support of the other members of the company is good. Among some of the strongest scenes are the march of the exiles to Siberia, the mines of Siberia and the final revolt and freedom.
