"SHALL WE SELL OR ELECTRIFY THE FARM ?"

This question has arisen in the mind of many a farmer who is "getting on in years," and begins to feel that it is about his time to give up the grinding hard work he has always had to do, retire and take things easy. So he thinks of selling the farm and moving to town. Many farmers do this, almost always to their later regret, because they find that they are not comfortable in town and that while they don't want to grind as they've always had to do before, still they miss their farm work and farm interests. So they fail to find satisfaction after all.

Others have struck a much better solution of the problem. During the last few years within which time the farm electric plant has put in its appearance and changed the whole face of country life. The farmer who has reached the retiring age finds that it isn't at all necessary for him to go to town to find the leisure that he needs. He finds that if he electrifies his farm, the drudgery will disappear from farm work, chores will almost do themselves, and he'll have an extra hired man.

Electrical conveniences of all kinds, such as washing machines, vacuum sweepers and flat irons will make his wife's lot much easier and give her, too, the increased leisure that she needs as much as he does. They will have in their house bright and safe electric lights in every room upstairs and down, lights in the halls, controlled from either floor, lights on the porches and at the barn that can be turned on and off from the house. They will have a bath room with hot and cold running water. There will be water on tap in the kitchen, faucets outside for sprinkling the lawn.

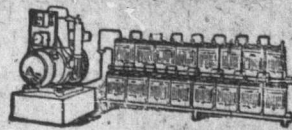

All of these conveniences come with electricity, and the farmer who takes advantage of them finds that he no longer has to think of selling the farm and moving to town for ease and comfort in his declining years. He can enjoy them much better right on the farm where he has life, and he can still take an interest in his life work.

Edna, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Scott, Lake Road, met with a painful accident on Sunday. She was up in the hay mow of the barn, and in some manner fell out, while falling she struck her neck on a nail or some other sharp object, inflicting a nasty gash which required several stitches to close.

James Gay, who has been manager of the Lambton Packing Company at Petrolia for the last eight years, has sent in his resignation and will be succeeded by D. J. Reid, of Hamilton.
