

DISTINGUISHING HAND-MADE PAPER.

It is not generally easy to distinguish hand made from machine paper, because there are machines which turn out rough-edged paper. The Paper Zeitung points out a simple means of testing: Take a roll or strip of paper about an inch wide placed gently in water so that the upper surface keeps dry. In machine made paper the two sides will unroll in the direction of the middle or centre, but in hand made paper the sides will unfold in the form of a plate. This shows that the fibres in hand made are equally disposed as to length and breadth, while in machine made papers they are chiefly extended in length.
