

The success of our efforts here will depend in great measure on the determination of the non-nuclear nations, who are really the parents and historical guardians of this project, to see it through to its conclusion. Unless we can act in concert now, our long and earnest efforts may have been in vain.

We at this Twenty-Second Assembly have been given the opportunity of bringing into effect the only arms control agreement now possible of achievement. Without this agreement is there much prospect of future progress in disarmament?

The Governments here assembled have an opportunity to take a step forward towards a more peaceful and secure world by approving the proposed Treaty on Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons. Canada urges the Assembly to act now.
