

but we cannot bear them now (cf. John xvi: 12). Until that perfection of Reason is reached, our Philosophy and Theology must be imperfect, and our struggle must be to realize our true being and character; for the source of these great systems of thought is, as the philosopher Fichte says, the man himself who has them.