her thing ist. This of work is solicitous of justice ocontinue.

ount.

O was not to that to-day, in, wrote in famous, sting sysd he prosed a remained he delegated he delega fo meet

Federal
reason
ot agree,
to the m we all
he same
onsisting
Lorrain

their reind the raw the le memery well ne 22nd ssioners no said ade and ed, and that all pone is stem, I passing reform orming, ustainnorities ndge Jette and Messrs. Lorrain and Veir cays at page 22:—

, and I

? It will be said, perhaps, that judicial organization has no connection with procedure. The contrary is the case. Even if the procedure were excellent; if the organization which should it it into execution is defective, the evil will lickist, or rather the remedy will be ingreaded.

enfeacious

"Good dministration," says Mr. Bertrand, councilior to the Court of Appeals, of Parls,
"depends in a great measure upon the organization of judicial bodies.

"With most nations this organization is dif-

"With most nations this organization is different, With all there are complaints of imperfections and abuses. Il demand reforms "The problem to be solved is to find an or-

The problem to be solved is to find an organization which while respecting the rules of justice and equity can dispose of the greatest amount of business in the simplest, most expeditions, most efficient and least costly manner for all concerned for all concerned

"This recreation, then, is in the front rank of ms to be introduced."

Here, then, is a report which emanates neither from the Government nor from myselt, but from a body of distinguished men completely independent of the Government, and which says:-"This reorganizatio... then, is in the front rank of the refe. ms to be introduced." Already the late Mr. Justice T. J. J. Loranger, in the apport presented in 1882 by the first commission appointed for the consolidation of the C de of Procedure, insisted upon this capital point. Mr. Pagnuelo in his excellent work entitled : "Letter on Judicial Reform," published in 1880, had also pointed out this reorganization as necessary. Hon. Mr. Laflamme and Mr. Edmond Larue, in brochures published in 1882, equally mention it as the compeer with reform in the Code of Procedure. There is no doubt that of all the reforms which we may attempt these, wirely combined, would produce the most considerable results."

MR. LAFLAMME'S VIEWS.

I cannot better terminate these remarks than in supporting myself upon the authority of an eminent man who has recently been taken from us. I mean the Hon. Mr. Rodolphe Laflamme, who in 1882 wrote on the question of judicial reform. The opinion of Mr. Laflamme is one that everybody respects. As a lawyer he was at the head of his profession. 1 had lately charged him to represent in England the interests of the province of Quebec in a case of the highest importance which he pleaded with so much of ability, so much of science, so much of zeal, that Sir Horace Davy, one of the most distinguished ·members of the English Bar, paid me the compliment of thanking me for having sent Hon. Mr. Latlamme to give him the assistance of his legal talents. l'o-day the emment lawyer, the frank friend, so loyal and large hearted, the former minister of justice and attorney-general of the Dominion, has disappeared, and 1 profit by the occasion of so important a question as that which I am now discussing, and which he had so well studied, to render to his talents, to his merits, and above all, to the act of courage and of faith which illuminated his death, a public and solemn testimony.

The honorable gentleman resumed his seat amid a storm of applause from both sides of the House.