

When autumn's mellow brown the wood o'erspreads,
And fades the smiling verdure of the meads;
When genial skies a milder influence shed,
And tinge with ruddy gleam the mountain's head;
When all the labouring world around is still;
Soft whispering gales alone the valley fill,—
Nature seems softly sinking to repose,
And the sweet calm in part on man bestows.
The jarring thoughts its lulling influence feel,
And o'er each sense delights unbidden steal—
Why ask the vain parade of worldly pride,
The toys which man's insensate race divide?
