

ONTARIO'S PRIME MINISTER LEAVING HIS OFFICE. Hon. J. P. Whitney, walking across the snow-sprinkled lawn in Queen's Park, to his residence.—Photo by Wm.

Aspasia and the Athenians of opportunities to achieve greatness on the contrary, strange to say, her majority of her class.

not been as sensual as that of the has ever seen, preserved to posterity their fine features; artists, statesmen, teachers—all were at their feet. apparent disqualification was her real

But does not the real question reapparent disqualification was her real opportunity; for the high-born Athenian girl, seemingly more fortunate when at length she was wedded to a specific property of the real question relate less to the extent of Aspasia's Meanwhile, the wives remained at home caring for unloved children, and wrought by its exercise? It is true so lost to the refinements of their anthat she urged the unfortunate citizen cestors that before the end of the diswas free to practise arts of pleasing, lost sight of altogether. Not one of and was encouraged by custom to invent new methods of teeding the vanities of men. Undoubtedly, too, in studying how best to first ensnare and then enslave, she profited from the advice of the experienced philosophers, just as the gentle Theodota was guided by Socrates himself. That her ultimate success was purely intellectual is clearly evidenced by the fact that the most seventleness through the source of these simultaneously the records abound increasingly in mention of "the companions." Nobody ever heard of Mrs. Plato, or Mrs. Aristotle, or Mrs. Epicurus, or Mrs. Isocrates; but Archeans the most seventleness through the source of these simultaneously the records abound increasingly in mention of "the companions." Nobody ever heard of Mrs. Plato, or Mrs. Isocrates; but Archeanses, the profit of the companions of the companions of the companions. The companions of the companions. most scrupulous citizens brought scores of others. One writer painted Aspasia was indeed a genius. She their own wives to her for instruction; fascinating pictures of one-hundred but it is unlikely that the powerful and thirty-three; the comic poets law to contract marriage with a citizen but it would be a grave mistake to assume that she was thereby deprived husband who had been chosen for her women to strive to attain a higher mal story we are told that they ate husband who had been chosen for her level by cultivating attractiveness of like dogs, tearing away meat with by old women in her early years, was mind and person; but she must have their teeth and cramming it into their by custom relegated to the attic and realized, possibly not without gratifi mouths. And yet, in theory and beby custom relegated to the attic and realized, possibly not without gratin forbidden that association with others which is essential to the development of mind and manners. But possessing little. In point of fact, indeed, the effect produced was quite the reverse tributes now-a-days considered essential to the maintenance of a secure position in polite society, Aspasia's women were exhilarated by wit, wisdom, tact and charm sufficed Aspasia's success; and from the day to win for her a personal influence of her ascendancy the former lost to conclude that the decay of Athara. wit, wisdom, tact and charm sufficed Aspasia's success; and from the day to win for her a personal influence of her ascendancy the former lost over learned men not wielded before ground steadily, and the latter becan with the ascendancy of Aspasia, but also to infer that no state can with all of the stranger women, she influential, until finally the latter were long survive the humiliation of one Son of Mr.

A SMA' SOLDIER LADDIE. and Mrs. J. J. Zock,

LATE HUGH MURRAY OF HAMILTON.

the unavoidable effect of open disregard of what might be termed in-If so, the lesson is one well learned in these days of loosening marital ties, since it supplements that which has come to be regarded as only a moral requirement with a vitally practical reason for sturdy resistance to further encreachments upon the whole-some condition traditionally attained thru matrimony.—George Harvey, in The North American Review for De-

WHAT ABOUT OLD AGE?

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's re-turn to the strenuous life after a brief experience of that "labor and sorrow" which a man in his seventy-second year has authority to expect is surely one more rebuke to those who cavil at the stress and strain of modern ex-

"What, sir," asked Dr. Johnson "would you know what it is to feel the evils of old age? Would you have the gout? Would you have decrepi-tude?"

with one's eye upon modern old age the doctor's half-cynical, half-pathetic questions sound oddly out of place. This is the day of old men. A strenuous old age folowing a strenuous youth is the fashion. "C.-B." is only one example out of many of the antiseptic effect of hard work properly combined with a common-sense rule of living. Doctors of medicine have been telling man and women to "vibrate" and live log; President Roosevelt tells them to "sweat and be saved."

Of the host of strenuous old men of to "sweat and be saved."

Of the host of strenuous old men of to-day two come to memory first because their names have a topical interest. They are Sir John Hare, the actor, and Sir Charles Santley, the singer, two of the birthday knights. Neither, to be sure, is aged, but both are standing witnesses to the truth of the hard-work doctrine as a life-preserver. Sir Charles Wyndham is several years the senior of Sir Lohn Hare server. Sir Charles Wyndham is several years the senior of Sir John Hare, the the popular idea is probably to the contrary, for he was born in me year of Queen Victoria's accession to the throne, just seventy years ago. Sir Charles' father was a medical man, who wrote a book entitled "What to Eat, Drink and Avold," but hard work is the secret of Sir Charles' health s the secret of Sir Charles' health.

There are certain men whom it is impossible to pass by in a connection such as this. They belong to the royal family of the aged. Such, in his day, was Gladstone. Such, in the present year, are Lord Strathcona and General Booth. That racy Americanism "Sweat and be saved" had its language been a trifle more polite, might have served as a motto for the Strathcona coat-of-arms. The high commissioner of Canarms. The high commissioner of can-ana is a young man of 87, who has lived and is living the strenuous life as few men can have lived it in the world's history. He still puts in five days of hard work each week at the Dominion offices, and is no older in spirit than when he was fifty. General Booth is nine years younger than Lord Strathcona—an man of the same type, who has obeyed the same hard rules

You never know how much real comfort there is in Clothes until you have worn one of

They have a National reputation, Worn

Write for Samples and Measurement Chart

from Coast to Coast.

DEPT "D"

FRANK BRODERICK & Co. TORONTO, CANADA.

of living. "My wife is in heaven, and I have no home, merely a place where I keep some furniture," are words which throw some light on one example of strenuous old age. Yet another grand old man who has killed the microbe of senility with the antiseptic of intense toil is Lord Avebury, the savant who "has a tender love for flowers, children, wasps, clerks and the rest of the smaller creation."

He is the prime minister's senior by two years, and has lived austerely all his life in the central turmoil of the world's busiest epoch. Of him one world's busiest epoch. Of him one might say, with Cicero, that "When a man hath led his former life quietly, uprightly, godly and laudably, his old age is very mild, pleasant and courteous. Such was the old age of Plato, who, in the eighty-first year of his age, died as he sat writing."

"It is not years that make age," said Sir Theodore Martin, the G. O. M. of English literature, now in his 92nd year. "Frivolous pursuits, base passions unsubdued, narrow selfishness, vacuity of mind, life with sordid aims or no aim at all these are the things. or no aim at all—these are the things that bring age upon the soul."

How body and soul may pass onward together in happy union until the end of the journey comes pectedly in sight has been delicately told by another octogenarian of strenuous life—Mr. Marston, the pub-

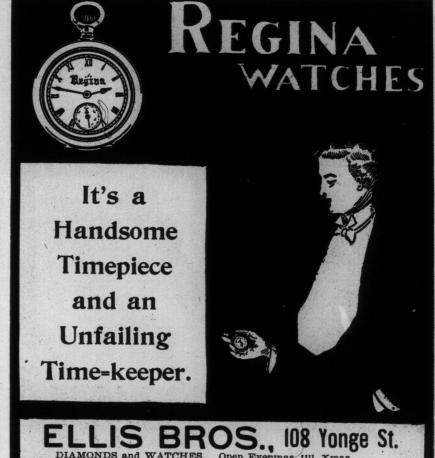

"In my particular case," he writes, "it seems to me that old age approached so gradually and with such stealthy steps that its approach has been im-perceptible, and it is only recently that I have found out, not so much after all by any grave change in my bodily activity as by the Anno Domini which tells me I was born nearly eighty-three years ago, and therefore must be old." Is modern old age, then, a failure?— H. M., in London Daily News.

STORIES ABOUT WARDS.

"If the 'arbitrator' is chosen to end the railway deadlock," says The London Chronicle, "there is no reason to dread that his decision would be' arbitrary,' tho the two words are very near relatives. An 'arbiter,' the Latin word which used to be more common as English than it is now, meant by derivation simply 'one who went to' something to examine it, and so at first a spectator or witness. Then, in Roman law, it assumed the technical sense of an umpire. But a 'judicium,' the legal decision in a case with regard to a definite sum of money, for instance, was distinguished from an 'arbitrium,' a legal decision as to an incertain sum, which had to be determined. Hence 'arbitrary,' acquired the sease of uncertain, capricious.
"Disaster" is an astrological term.

meaning "unfavorable star"—one of the many words that astrology has bequeathed to the English language. "Predominant," "ill-starred," "in the ascendant," are other instances, not to speak of the expression "My stars!" Even "influence" is really astrological, signifying the flowing in upon human affairs of the power of some heavenly body.

"Petrel" and "petrol" both descend fr m "petra," a rock. "Petrol" comes directly enough, thru "petroleum," rock oil, but "petrel" thru St. Peter, after whom the bird was named, be-Grand secretary of the Masonic Grand Lodge in Canada, and past grand naster, whose largely attended funeral took place on Saturday, November 30. cause it appeared to walk upon the

A GOOD INVESTMENT.

There are few national subjects so imperfectly understood as that of bird protection; and comparatively few readers who realize that the protection of birds is a subject of such wide importance. Most people look upon the movement as having no deeper significance than the worthy agitation of a group of enthusiasts, and to these I commend the statistics recently compiled by the entomologist of the agriculture department showing the annual loss of millions of dollars to the country's agriculture thru only the destructive work of insects. There is not a farmen or a land owner in America whose pocket is not directly affected by bird protection, for the very good reason that in no country in the world do insects impose a heavier tax on farm products; than in the United States; and birds are the most dependable as well as most active destroyers of insects. So you see the subject is one of the greatest general concern for every wild bird that is saved is a diligent and an intelligent "extra hand" added to the farmer's crop-making "help," at no cost to hom. The important role which agriculture fills in our country's resources and wealth and presperity I need not dwell upon, protection; and comparatively few portant role which agriculture fills in our country's resources and wealth and presperity I need not dwell upon, I am sure; the knowledge of it is in the mouth of every schoolboy. What I do wish to emphasize is, that in helping to protect the birds you are in reality working directly or indirectly according to your vocation, for the benefit of your ewa pocket, and on you for a husband."

that score I make my appeal for your aid.—From Caspar Whitney's "Viewpoint," in The Outing Magazine for December.

For One Self-Working Washer SENT FREE Trial. Only Asks Consideration on its Merits Let the Machine Speak for Itself Self-Working Washer pays for itself in hat I claim for it and what I am prepared to after 30 days' trial you feel that the ma-all it is represented to be, send it back at you keep it, you can if you wish, pay for it in or monthly instalments, out of what it saves e will make you independent of laundries en, and save you worry with your maid. will take care of your lingerie, and wash spotlessly eavy garments besides. out clothes or break buttons. There ching or tearing. The 1906 Self-Working Washer washes by driving the soapy water through the threads of the clothes, just as if you held them under a high water fall of soapy water. or an electric light key. As soon as a hes is washed a twist of your fingers over to the wringer and wrings the an have a big washing out before 9 rning without any drudgery, fretfulness Remember, you can test the truth of this without it costing you a penny

Address me:

S. W. S. BACH, Mgr. 1900 Washer Co. 355 YONGE STREET, TORONTO

Write for the machine to-day or send for my illustrated washer book.