The Crimson Slipper.

BY DORA LANGLOIS.

It is a matter of common knowledge that a lady's smile is not always bright, but more or less according to her own abilities as a walker. Now, Mrs. John Halliday was evidently no pedestrian, for we had certainly not covered three-quarters of a mile of road when we found ourselves once more ascending a hill, and now, therefore, that we must have overhauled the turning. Fortunately a man with a turban cap was coming towards us just then, and to him we applied for information.

The mill itself seemed to have been tacked on to it by some freholder as an afterthought. The water-wheel was not visible, but it was clearly in that end of the building nearest to us as we advanced across the field; for the water of the mill-race ran from the parent stream in the field towards the back of the house, and appeared again flowing under the masonry of a low arch in the front wall of the building close to that corner of the dwelling which we were now approaching. The quiet lapping of the water showed that the wheel was not moving, a few pipe grubs bed in the orchard in front of the house, curiously pushing aside the coals and the bits of wood which were scattered about. It was the place that but for the handsome, modern mansion in the rear would have been a garden of the most ordinary kind. show the gentlemen into the parlor, and look into the old Bible?" "I don't want no Bible," the old man answered, turning on her nastily. "If this here Philip was born in eighteen hundred and twenty, and died in eighteen hundred and twenty, he'd be a young man when I was a boy, and I should mind him right enough without no Bibles, and no entries."

He moved to the door as he spoke, but at that very moment his wife (who no doubt could no longer resist the temptation to join in the hunt for a missing relative with money) came into the room through an inner door. "You're a sufficiently broad hint; we took it, but good bye to the flustered and disappointed Mrs. Halliday and her spouse, and departed without further parley."

ANNAPOLIS.

ANNAPOLIS, May 4. — The death of Samuel Bent, a highly respected farmer, occurred at his home in Granville Centre on Monday, from the effects of a grippe, at the advanced age of 85 years. Deceased leaves two sons and three daughters. One son, John, is living in Middleton, Mass., and the remaining children at home. News was received on Tuesday of the death of Mrs. Fullerton of Round Hill, which occurred at the home of her son in Toronto Sunday last, after an attack of pneumonia, at the age of 68 years. Three children, Dr. William F. Fullerton of St. Paul, Minn.; Anby W. Fullerton, journalist of Toronto; and Mrs. May, also of Toronto, survive her. The remains were brought to Round Hill, and the funeral took place yesterday and was largely attended.

WANTS DIVORCE.

On the Ground That His Wife Was Already Married.

Scott B. Jones, of Sutton (Mass.), has instituted divorce proceedings in the Worcester county court, which opens at Worcester (Mass.) on Monday next. He asks that the marriage to Madeline Jones be declared null and void on the ground that the woman had a husband living at the time of his marriage to her and that the first husband is still living. In his petition, Jones states that he married a woman in Sutton known as Madeline Jones, and that they have since lived together in that town as husband and wife. He alleges that although the marriage was in legal form it was not a marriage in substance or legal effect, and that the legal husband of the woman is, accordingly, when he learned that she was, and still is, the rightful wife of Alexander Hay of Haverhill, N. B., to whom she was united May 1, 1882, at Barnstable. Jones asks the court to declare the marriage ceremony of 1882 null and void. If from New Brunswick or other evidence is expected depositions or other evidence the court, which will also hear Mrs. Jones' side of the case.

GEORGE McLEAN PROMOTED.

BOSTON, May 4.—George J. McLean, a well known newspaper man who was formerly a resident of St. John, has been appointed city editor of the Boston Herald, a position of great responsibility in a city of nearly 600,000 population. Mr. McLean was engaged in newspaper work in St. John up to eight years ago. He was on the staff of the Worcester Telegram for some time, and later after joining the Herald local staff, was appointed Boston correspondent of the New York Herald. His rise has been steady, and on his well deserved elevation to the city editor's chair. A previous occupant of the position was S. A. Wetmore, also a former St. John man.
