THE RING.
Victory for Wilde.
London exchanges tell of another remarkable triumph achieved by the old British boxer, Jimmy Wilde, who in a match a few days ago with J. Conn of the Chelsea football ground, knocked nearly two stones weight to an opponent at the top of his class and on in the twelfth round. At this point Conn was in such a helpless state at the referee very properly stopped the contest. The London Chronicle writes: "Wilde is undoubtedly the most wonderful little boxer the ring has known. appearance he is like an under-developed schoolboy of 18, a pale faced youth with frail arms and legs. But he is a great width of shoulder and a striking power that no one realizes quite so well as his opponent. As he stood up Conn, who weighed in at 161 lbs., his physical handicap seemed all too big to overcome. From the first round, however, Wilde outboxed his opponent and the latter's magnificent defence could have outlasted him. His speed is amazing; he carried the fight so lightly to his opponent that his own defence was a secondary matter. "It was probably Conn's plan to bring Wilde down to his own level of skill

Columbus Grand Circuit.
All the races at the grand circuit meet in Columbus were keenly contested yesterday. The 2.06 pace was won by Director J. in straight heats; best time 2.03 1/2. The 2.08 trot was captured by The Toddler, three out of four heats; best time 2.05 1/2. Alma Forbes won the 2.12 trot, three out of five heats, and Peter June captured the three-year-old trot, two out of three heats.

Orderlies who have been acting as servants for German officers are now being sent into the trenches, but there is no truth in the rumor that the Crown Prince has been reduced to the necessity of blacking his own boots.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

TOOKE COLLARS
PUGET SOUND REGION SAID TO BE AN IDEAL COUNTRY TO LIVE IN.
Puguet Sound has no poisonous snakes, no flies, and no mosquitoes. This is literally true concerning serpents and almost so with the other two pests of human comfort.
What blessed St. Patrick drove the snakes out of this beautiful country, legend does not chronicle. Why there are so few flies and mosquitoes is also an unexplainable mystery.
The absence of poisonous reptiles in a country where there is such a resort to the woods and streams as the inhabitants of this unexampled scenic country continually indulge in is surely something to thank the gods for. Lovers of the illimitable open may here tramp along the rocky borders of mountain streams, or, rolled in their blankets, sleep the sleep of the tired, or journey through sylvan shades with no fear of the soul-piercing alarm of the poisonous rattler or the deadly cottonmouth.
Freedom from the less dangerous but more troublesome flies and mosquitoes is no less pleasurable. Those who had experience in the army camps in the south during the Spanish-American war still vividly remember the clouds of flies that made life in those camps almost unbearable. Such quantities of flies attacked the soldiers at mealtime there that it was with difficulty any food was got by them into the mouth. At night these insects are comparatively nil. With the cool summer weather and freedom from insects this is perhaps the ideal camp in the country.
At Camp Lewis, where 80,000 to 60,000 men of the National Army are continually being retrained and trained, the hum of mosquitoes was more fearful than the roar of battle guns could have been.
Some day, when war has ceased and peace has come, when the thousands of soldiers who have been trained at Camp Lewis return to civil life and have time for contemplation, the glories of this Puget Sound country, with its mild climate and its freedom from poisonous reptiles and plague-breeding insects, will arise in their memories with wailing sobs, and there will be many of them seeking residence in this beautiful wooded country, with its sea-girt shores and its many other natural charms and few disadvantages.
It has been prophesied that Seattle will some day be the meeting place for Orient and Occident and that here will finally be built the great world city. Out of the knowledge disseminated by the soldiers who have experienced its advantages will grow a longing of peoples everywhere to see for themselves the boasted advantages.
The war will have its blessings to offset its tragedies and this will be one of them—that the world will know just what this Puget Sound country has to boast of, and be anxious to share in those advantages.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.
