

PROVINCIAL NEWS.

CHATELAIN, N. B., April 19.—In the civic election today the result was as follows: Gallivan, Snowball, Watt, Bentley and Fraser standing in order named. The first named with Mayor Murdoch, Ald. Maher, McLachlan and Morris constitute the town council for the ensuing year. All the candidates addressed the electors from the balcony of the town hall.

County Councillor Thomson W. Flett was stricken with apoplexy at noon today at Nelson, where he resides. He was restored to consciousness by the efforts of several medical men and at the time of last report was resting easily.

HAFFERTON, April 19.—The corporation and parishioners of the Church of England parish of St. Paul's in the parish of Hafferton, met last evening. An interesting feature was the presentation of the financial statement which showed that after years of effort the debt which weighed down upon them so heavily had been entirely lifted, and that a new era of prosperity and success had been entered upon. Such a statement naturally had an uplifting effect upon all present, and afforded much satisfaction.

The following officers were elected for the current year: Warden—G. O. Dickson and E. R. DeMill. Vestry—Geo. Langstroth, Captain Percy Belyea, J. Heber Smith, J. H. Dickson, J. M. Scott, Dr. Wetmore. Vestry clerk—George Langstroth. Delegates for Diocesan Synod—G. O. Dickson, Dr. W. H. Wetmore. Alternates—J. Fred Olney and J. M. Scott.

The Rev. C. D. Schofield and his bride are expected home from their honeymoon trip during the present week, and the pastor is expected to resume his pastoral duties next Sunday. They will receive a cordial welcome.

The Rev. H. E. Erb has resigned the pastorate of the Baptist church at the Station, Smithtown, Titusville, Salt Springs and Lakeview, over which he has presided since early last summer, preaching his farewell sermon last Sunday. In addition to these churches the Baptist interests at the Village and Central Norton are also represented by the Rev. H. E. Erb. It is not at present known in what direction Mr. Erb intends to move. He is erecting a new house on the old homestead farm at the village, and may go there for the summer months.

Mrs. Prichard of Main street, from which she is very ill with a gripe, from which she has been a great sufferer for the past two weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Percy Humphrey and their two children will be summer guests at Hampton, making their home at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. George Brown on Station Road.

Mrs. Prichard and family have taken rooms with Miss Ann Cochran for the summer, under the able management of Mr. and Mrs. Cooper of St. John, and the latter's father, Albert Peters, are said to have spoken for summer quarters at the residence of Mrs. Myles H. Fowler and family are to take possession of the house on Main street to be vacated by Mrs. Prichard, and the N. B. Barnes house and farm, where they have resided since last summer, will be occupied by Jas. H. McAvity's family as a summer home.

All the indications are that Hampton will be full of summer visitors as soon as the season sets in, and no more enjoyable place for a summer outing can be found in the province.

SUMMER HILLS, April 19.—Many absent relatives and friends will regret to learn of the death of Mrs. John A. Kerr, who passed peacefully away at her home shortly after seven o'clock Sunday morning, April 19th. The funeral took place Wednesday afternoon and was largely attended. After the usual service at her home her remains were conveyed to the Methodist church, which had been the scene of her baptism and marriage, and of which she was a prominent member and organizer for over twenty-five years. There a host of relatives and friends crowded the aisles to pay their last tribute of respect to one who was greatly loved in the neighborhood.

The Rev. W. E. Johnson conducted the service and delivered a very pertinent address from the last part of the first Epistle of Peter, in which he referred to the deceased her loss to the church, in the home, and in society; they mourn their loss, but not as those without hope of a glorious reunion.

"Sometime We Shall Understand," by her request, was rendered by the choir, after which her body was conveyed to the family residence.

Deceased was 37 years old and leaves a husband and one child, Ida Beatrice.

For Horses and Cattle. Used for the treatment and cure of Distemper, Worms, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Scourches, Mud Fever, Swollen Legs, and all Skin Diseases. Gives a glow and pliability to the skin unequalled by any other preparation. The only Horse medicine in the province put up by a qualified Vet. Surgeon. For sale by all druggists and country stores.

W. MANCHESTER, SUSSEX, N. B.

thirteen months old, to mourn the loss of a loving wife and mother.

HAVERLOCK, N. B., April 19.—The funeral of the late David Wright took place on Monday afternoon at the Methodist Church and was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Howie.

The concert and sale in aid of the bell fund has been postponed until Saturday, April 23rd inst. A ball to be held the last of April will close the assembly for the season. All the teachers of the superior school will resign this term.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamu, who came here from St. John last fall, will leave Haverlock the first of May, much to the regret of the citizens of this village.

Mrs. Eliza McMaclean and son were summoned to Shuben on Wednesday by the dangerous illness of George McMaclean, son of Mrs. Eliza McMaclean, who underwent an operation for appendicitis. At last report Mr. McMaclean was doing well.

SACKVILLE, N. B., April 19.—The athletic association of Mt. Allison gave their annual concert Friday evening. The recital of Dr. Archibald's violin pupils, which will be a great musical treat, takes place Tuesday, April 26th.

Sunday afternoon a meeting was held in Beethoven hall under the auspices of the Ladies' College Mission Board. An interesting address was given by Miss Lizzie Hart on school life in Japan.

The Y. W. C. A. cleared between fifty and sixty dollars by their entertainment last Friday evening.

The Rev. C. R. Quinn of Mt. Whately occupied the pulpit of St. Paul's church Sunday evening, Rev. C. F. Flett taking the services at St. Paul's.

The third number of "Allison's" has recently been issued and contains much valuable information. Notable features are the list containing the names of Ladies' College teachers since the opening in 1884.

Mrs. Wm. Clark of Woodport has purchased the house on Squire street owned by A. Murphy, formerly of Sackville, but now living in Dorchester.

A pleasant meet of the Whist Club took place last Friday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Murray.

HOPEWELL HILL, April 19.—The steamer Beaver, which has been laid up for the winter at Harvey, left yesterday for St. John on her first trip of the season. The bark Edna M. Smith, the first square rigger to arrive, is now at the Cape. She will load deals for J. Nelson Smith. Five of the bark's crew deserted last night and passed through here today. They were in the party two Englishmen, two Americans and a Jap. They complain of hard work and poor fare. A three masted schooner has arrived to load plaster at Hillsboro.

Mrs. Benjamin, widow of the late Silas Benjamin, died at her home at Lower Cape Breton, after a short illness of inflammation of the lungs. Mrs. Benjamin was about 80 years of age and was respected by all. She was a native of Deer Island, but had lived for many years in this county. She leaves two sons, Silas of this village, and Charles, living in the States.

has again begun. Already John Hopkins of Bristol has erected and enclosed a house to be used as the residence of Mr. Dolbe Nelson Drost has his house on the site of the Ziba Giberson lot all up and enclosed.

The Crain Bros. have their new steam saw mill at Kiffoil all ready for spring's sawing, and have shipped away several car loads of sawn lumber from this station.

Large quantities of snow are reported yet in the woods and back settlements. A number of stream drivers left this railway station for the up-river stream driving today.

SUSSEX, April 19.—Miss Margaret Howard left on Monday for the States, where she will resume her nursing at a vacation at home.

Miss Blanche Fairweather of Sydney, C. B., spent a few days in Sussex last week, and left on Monday for Boston, where she will continue her work at the Massachusetts Hospital, training to be a nurse.

Arthur Berry and bride of Campbellton spent a few days in Sussex on their honeymoon, and probably where they spent their wedding trip.

John Roach, who was stricken with paralysis some time ago, is not expected to live.

GASPERDAUX, April 19.—James J. Langin, who has been seriously ill for some time, died on Friday last, March 26th. His son Jarvis and daughter Cora were with him during his illness. The body was taken to the Elm Hill cemetery on Saturday for burial and was escorted to the train by a large representation from the Odd Fellows' lodge of this place, of which he was a member. Deceased was a widower, 61 years old, and was born in Chipman, Queens county, New Brunswick, and with his family moved to Michigan, U. S., twenty-four years ago. He was the father of ten children, seven of whom are living. Deceased carried $1000 insurance in the Gold Reserve.

SUSSEX, N. B., April 19.—The case of the King against Thompson was continued today before the Superior Court. For the prosecution appeared Morrissey, P. L. Fairweather and M. Sproul for the defence. Owing to the alleged absence of a witness the prosecution asked for and obtained an adjournment till Monday, 26th.

The young lady who was alleged to have been assaulted by Thompson was continued today before the Superior Court. For the prosecution appeared Morrissey, P. L. Fairweather and M. Sproul for the defence. Owing to the alleged absence of a witness the prosecution asked for and obtained an adjournment till Monday, 26th.

The recent people of Sussex feel very indignant at the deliberate attempt to burke the actions against the liquor dealers by laying false and malicious charges against the witness and not hesitating to drag into the court a respectable lady, who was in no way connected with the case.

The case stands now before the court, and has since been arrested on a charge of carrying dangerous weapons. The hearing on the latter charge takes place tomorrow before Daniel Robertson, Esq., at Norton.

HOPEWELL HILL, April 19.—The special school meeting of the ratepayers of the Hill district, called on the 15th inst. by the chief superintendent, to again consider the advisability of joining with the consolidated school proposed to be established at Riverside or Albert, was held today in the hall here, and was largely attended.

The consolidated school, which would cost $150 each and $250 per year, the eight vans which it was considered would have all the advantages of the present grading of the best city schools, with country environment. The attendance, too, he considered, would be better, as expressed in a letter from the chief superintendent, that in a few years parish assessment would be augmented, so that the strong districts might help the weak. He spoke very highly of the chief superintendent, and of the plan, he believed, was highly speculative, and as far as the Hill district was concerned, impracticable in the extreme.

The consolidated school, which would cost $150 each and $250 per year, the eight vans which it was considered would have all the advantages of the present grading of the best city schools, with country environment. The attendance, too, he considered, would be better, as expressed in a letter from the chief superintendent, that in a few years parish assessment would be augmented, so that the strong districts might help the weak. He spoke very highly of the chief superintendent, and of the plan, he believed, was highly speculative, and as far as the Hill district was concerned, impracticable in the extreme.

The consolidated school, which would cost $150 each and $250 per year, the eight vans which it was considered would have all the advantages of the present grading of the best city schools, with country environment. The attendance, too, he considered, would be better, as expressed in a letter from the chief superintendent, that in a few years parish assessment would be augmented, so that the strong districts might help the weak. He spoke very highly of the chief superintendent, and of the plan, he believed, was highly speculative, and as far as the Hill district was concerned, impracticable in the extreme.

Six Doctors Failed to Cure Him.

ERYSIPELAS AND SALT RHEUM WAS THE TROUBLE.

Burdock Blood Bitters

DID MORE THAN SIX DOCTORS COULD DO.

Mrs. Theo. Newell, Argyle Sound, N.S., expresses her opinion of this wonderful blood remedy in the following letter:

"It is with the greatest gratitude that I can testify to the wonderful curative powers of Burdock Blood Bitters. For years my husband suffered terribly with Erysipelas and Salt Rheum. He was so bad at times that he could not sleep on account of the itching and burning. He had been under the care of six different doctors, but they failed to do him any good. I had read different times of the wonderful cures effected by Burdock Blood Bitters, so I decided to give it a trial. He did so, and after taking five bottles was cured without a doubt. I would strongly advise any person troubled with blood disorders to give B.B.B. a fair trial for I am sure it will cure them."

hall here, and was very largely attended. A spirit of intense interest in the proceedings was manifested by those present, the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no greater than those of the present, and that the matter before the meeting being considered of unusual importance. Mr. Tingley occupied the chair, and the speaker addressed the meeting, presenting the particular advantages to be derived from consolidation. The inspector, whose remarks were very intelligent and fairly given, admitted that the taxation at first would be heavier on account of the expense of building, but that after once established the taxes would be no