John Piggott, Sr., considers that it would be a misfortune to lay sheet asphalt in this city. The older section of London, England, is all paved with sheet asphalt and has been for some fifty years. Mr. Piggott, when in London, saw a staff of men repairing the work and, being interested in pavements, looked up the engineer in charge of the work. The engineer stated that the repairs were so extensive that they amounted to a renewal of the whole pavement every two years and a half. Accidents by reason of the slippery state of the pavement at certain seasons of the year were excessively heavy. Mr. Piggott has had considerable experience in pavements, and he is one of those most heavily interested in the new pavement, and he says that sheet asphalt is the most expensive pavement that can be put down in Chatham.

The other fire was at 4.30. Some children had been playing with fire-crackers near the barn owned by Mrs. McPaul on Selkirk street and had set the building on fire. It was a complete loss with no insurance. One time there were several surrounding buildings on fire. Firemen had to work hard to get the fire from spreading.
