THE CATHOLIC RECORD

AURELIA;

OR. THE JEWS OF CAPENA GATE.

CHAPTER IV. PARMENON'S REGISTER.

On the morning following the nocturnal conversation between Eutrapeles and Gurges, and the short consultation which had afterwards taken place between the had afterwards taken place between the former and Marcus Regulus, a stranger presented himself in the barber-shop soon after it had been opened. This stranger was no other than Par-menon, the slave-trader; but he longer wore the gaudy toga we have seen him wearing whilst attending his calling; his destrograd tunic was almost concealed ed tunic was almost concea dark-colored tunic was almost concealed under the folds of a wide pallium or

"I am sent," said Parmenon to the tonsor, whom he found alone in the shop, "by the Lord Marcus Regulus, for the business you know of."

"Ah, very well," said Entrapeles, "1 see that the Lord Marcus Regulus loses see that the Lord Marcus regulations loses no time. You are welcome." "Here," resumed Parmenon, "are the ten thousand sestertil which it has been agreed to pay Gurges, and here is the register which will prove the transfer to me of that amount.

me of that amount." Parmenon unrolled the connected leaves of a roll of papyrus of a common kind, and proceeded to explain the writing to the barber. "You see," said he, "here is the accep-tum on this side, and the expensum on that, which is sufficient to show that I have paid in order to receive. The ves-pillo must sign at the bottom of these two pillo must sign at the bottom of these two columns during the day." "Garges cannot come before night," remarked Entrapelee. "Very well," said Parmenon, "I shall call for my register at the hour you gener-ally see the Lord Marcus Regulus. He will not come to-night. See that the regis-ter be properly signed." And Parmenon went out, after nodding

And Parmenon went out, after nodding to Eutrapeles in a rather discourteou

"I don't like this fellow," mused the don't like this below, indeed the r. "He looks like a real particide's . After all, Regulus has wn reasons for employing him; it is tonsor.

no own reasons for employing min, it is none of my business." At the hour appointed, Parmenon called for his register. He found it duly signed by Garges. The vespillo had readily consented to The vespillo had readily consented to the transfer by which he got back the ten thousand sestertii he had considered lost. He could not understand, however, why any one should exchange those pretty gold pieces for a claim against an insolv-ent debtor like Cecilius.

On the following day, Parmenon, still wearing his dark tunic and his pallium, and carrying his register under his arm, could be seen awaiting the opening of the court of Pablius Anfidius Namusa, one of the secretary neutron who administration the seventeen pretors who administered justice in Rome. When this magistrate had taken his seat, and his crier (accensus) had asked aloud whether any citizen had a case for trial, Parmenon unrolled his register be-fore the pretor, and requested him to see that his claim against Cecilius was legal that his claim against councer certain, and demandable. Aufidius Namusa ordered an action to be entered against the fiscal agent, and be entered against the fiscal agent, buring be entered against the facal agent, and Parmenon went away rejoicing. During the day, an executor litium, or viator, that is to say, a constable, called on Cecilius. "I summon you in Parmenon's name; follow me to the court," said the viator, putting a written citation in the hands of the astonished Cecilius. "I do not know this Parmenon, and I owa him pothing." remarked Cacilins.

"I do not know this farmenoi, and T owe him nothing," remarked Cecilius. "This, the Pretor Publius Aufidius Namusa will decide," replied the viator. "If you should refuse, I would touch this witness's ear," he added, pointing to a man who had accompanied him, " and I would take yon by the neck, in conform-ity with the law of the Twelve Tables. with the law of the Twelve Tables However, you have until to morrow to make up your mind, for this is an uncertain day (intercisus dies). Cecilius, after due reflection, came to the conclusion that he could not do other-

"Yes, there he is, amidst that group of pleaders. I would advise you to speak to him; he will give you some means of escaping from Parmenon's clutches," said the stranger, pointing out the lawyer, who, the stranger, pointing out the lawyer, who, on his side, had lost nothing of this by-play unnoticed by others. Cecilius went straight up to Marcus Regulus, to whom he explained his case in a few words, asking him whether there was any means of obtaining a reversion of

"We shall see about it," replied Mar-"We shall see about it," replied Mar-cus Regulus; "I think we may find some remedy. But, at present, as you see, I am detained here by other engagements.

To be a set of the set found a communication from the City Prefect, enjoining him to explain his sus-pected affiliation with the Jews or Christians of Capena gate; then a summon from the Council of the Pontiffs, to answe from the Council of the Fontlins, to answer an accusation of sacrilege, based on the fact that the little god Jugations had been found found lying broken on the public highway, in front of his house. Could it be that some officious neigh-bor, having collected those mutilated fragments, had really carried them to the Pontiffs, and, in his indignation, had Pontiffs, and, in his indignation, had brought this accusation against Cecilius? Or did the blow come from a hand more directly interested in his ruin? The unfortunate man did not even think of propounding to himself these questions, overcome, as he was, by the triple calamity with which he was threat-ened; to be in Parmenon's clutches, to lose his situation. and. what was still lose his situation, and, what was still more serious, to be accused of sacrilege before the Pontiff's court!

"Cecilia !" he cried, in a voice of thunder, " come here, unworthy child !" The young girl hastened to her father's The young girl hastened to her father's presence. Since the scene witnessed by Gurges, she had not left the house. Her father had forbidden it. Cecilins had ascertained without difficulty that, as alleged, his daughter was a Christian, that she was about to marry a Jew, and that old Petronilla had been the cause of all this trouble. He was finned all this trouble. He was furious what we can be the second embraced the edious superstitions of those miserable Jews, the most despised of men; and he foresaw the misfortunes likely to happen to him, the agent of the law, and commissioned to enforce it in all its rigor towards a detested class, when it should be known that his own daughter had been initiated to their sacrilegious and impious creed. He had, therefore, signified to him faith, or he would compel her, even if he had to use the extraordinary power con-ferred by the law, to its fullest extent. Meanwhile he placed her under the decore travellance to prevent any comclosest surveillance, to prevent any com munication between her and those who n his judgment, had caused her ruin.

When Cecilia came down she found her father in a state of terrible excite-

"Wretched child," he cried, "here then, are the fruits of your infamous con duct !"

And he showed her the writ in Parme non's name, the citation to appear before the Pontiffs, and the Prefect's letter. "So," he continued, "I am ruined, my freedom is in the hands of a wretch, my life is in danger, because my danghte has betrayed her father and her gods !

Come, Cecilia, have yon reflected ? For you must speak now ! Will you re-nonnce that abominable creed ?" "How, my dear father, could the sacri-Would your fice of my faith save you ? misfortunes, if they exist, be remedied ? "If they exist! Great gods! Have invented them ?" "No, father; but it is not you they threaten, it is me!" "How is that?" "The City Prefect will not dis-place you when you will have told him that your daughter is a Christian. The Pontiffs will set multic you hu me when they learn the they have they learn is a Christian. The Pontifis will not punish you, but me, when they learn hat I broke the idol.

Great gods ! Have] invented them ?

partments, or pigeon-holes, in the thick-ness of the wall, into which the scrinia were placed horizontally. The number of books contained in these

CHAPTER V. A LEGAL CONSULTATION. Marcus-Atilius Regulus possessed more wealth than many illustrious patricians. In his youth he once offered a sacrifice to

In his youth he once chered a sachine to the gods, for the purpose of learning whether he would ever possess sixty millions sisterii; and he cfen related, himself, how, on that occasion, the en-trails of the victims happening to be double, he had understood this omen to mean that this immense sum was twice promised to him.

romised to him. He had, in fact, accumulated this incredible amount, but by the most abject and infamous means. His career may be divided into three distinct periods.

divided into three distinct periods. During the first, which extends from Nero's reign to those of Vespasian and Titus, he served his apprenticeship in those crimes which subsequently won those crimes which subsequently won him such unenviable fame. His father, banished by Claudius or by Nero, having left him no patrimony, he had felt at an early age the thirst for blood, and the insatiable craving for gold —Libidiue sanguinis et hiatu premiorum, says Tacitus, with inimitable force of style—and he had inaugurated his en-trance into the her by becoming instrusays Tactus, with infinite the style—and he had inaugurated his en-trance into the bar, by becoming instru-mental in three odious murders, perpet-rated by Nero, upon his accusations. These murders were those of Marcus Licinius Crassus, great-grandson of the formers orator, who was also one of the famous orator, who was also one of the wealthiest ciuzens of Rome, during the last years of the republic; and of Camer-inus and Salvidienus Orphitus, about whose rank and quality little is said by the historians. The accusation against Crassus brough to Regulus seven millions sestertii; those against Camerinus and Salvidienus Or-phitus were paid with the questorship and the sacerdotal dignity. During the second period, which com-During the second period, which com-prises the reigns of Vespasian and Titus, informers were looked upon with dis-favor. Regulus endeavored to retain his seat in the Senate, but was crushed under the burning words of Curtius Montanus, and ignominiously expelled from that illustricus body.

illustrious body. He returned to the bar where shone such men as Satrius Rufus, Pompeius Saturninus, Suetonius, the author of the life of the Twelve Creazer, Salvius Liber-alus, Cornelius Tacitus, the great historian, Caius Fronto, Tuscilius Nominatus, Claud ins Restitutus, and Pliny-the-Younger, the greatest orator among them. We need not say that Regulus was des-

We need not say that Regulas was des-pised by his colleagues. Daring the third period,—Domitian's reign,—Marcus (Regulas resumed his trade of informer and spy. It was not however, by acting openly, as he had done in former times, but by secret de-nunciations and dark undertakings, that nunciations and dark undertakings, that he endeavored to win Domitian's favor. He vied in infamous zeal with Metius Carus, a vile informer, but less dangerous than Regulas, aud who could scarcely brook the latter's competition. Herennius Senecionus having been condemned and put to death through the condemned and put to death through the accusations of Metius Carus, simply be-cause he had eulogized Helvidius Priscus, the son-in-law of Thraseas, and one of Nero's victims. Regulus, jealous of hav-Nero's victims. Regulus, jealous of hav-ing had no share in so meritorious a de-nunciation, attempted to connect himself with it by pursing with his insults the memory of Herennius. But his rival could not bear this inter-ference, and checked him in the midst of his facile triumph, with this terrible apos-trophe: "What have you to do with my dead? Have you seen me torment Cras-sus and Camerinus ?"

sus and Camerinus ?

sus and Camerinus ?" Marcus Regulus was certainly, as one of his victims wrote to Domitian, the most wicked of two-legged animals,— omnium bipedum nequissimus. He was omnium bipedum nequissimus. He was also the most skilfal of plotters. We have already seen how he had woven a web around Flavius Clemens, the Grand-Vestal, and Metellus Celer. He had found a most useful tool in the loquacious Extraorelia in when show he miched up Eutrapeles, in whose shop he picked up, almost every night, some valuable information.

"Oh, gods!" faltered Cecilius, [[as-"Oh, gods!" faltered Cecilius, [fas-tounded. "I do not think," remarked the lawyer unconcernedly, "that things will be pushed so far. And yet I would not affirm it, for the divine Domitian has undertaken to restore the creed. But he is absent, and, thanks to this circum-stance, the pontiff may not be so string-ent. It is probable they may be satisfied with a heavy sum of money in reparation for the sacrilege, say twenty thousand sestertii, which yon will be obliged to pay in your quality of her father; for, accord-ing to law, the prosecution must be against yourself,-tecum est actio. But, at all events, your daughter shall have to renounce her superstition, else I cannot answer for the consequences." "And if my daughter does not abjure her creed, and I cannot pay the twenty thousand sestertii?"

sand sestertii?"

in the hands of all creditors?

His trouble did not escape Regulus

And as Cecilius made again a gestur hesitate to give up a daughter wh

The number of books contained in these nests was quite considerable, and had been collected at a great cost; for Regu us aspired to the triple fame of the juriscon-sult, the eloquent lawyer, and the writer; and the choice of his books corresponded and the choice of his books corresponded with this ambition. The table placed in the centre of the exedra was covered with briefs and do-cuments, with wax tablets and styles for taking notes; with pergamins and imma-culate sheets of papyrus for writing peti-tions and pleadings. There could also be seen the long calami which served as pens; the small, cylindrical vases, con-taining a gummy preparation for connect-ing together the papyrus sheets. The ing together the papyrus sheets. The rollers or sticks were piled there, ready to receive the completed manuscripts and "If you cannot pay the twenty thou-sand sesterti," replied the lawyer posit-ively, "the pontiffs will enforce the sale heir umbilici. When Cecilius entered the exedra, the lawyer seemed to be busily engaged in examining some manuscripts; but an oblique glance thrown on his visitor was of your body to recover the judgment. This is why I have just told you that it would amount to the same thing," examining some manuscripts; but an oblique glance thrown on his visitor was sufficient to identify the latter. An im-perceptible smile lighted his features. "What is it? What do ycu want?" he asked, feigning at first not to recognize Cecilius; then he resumed, "Ahl very well; it is you who epoke to me yester-day, concerning one Parmenon—" "Yes, sir," replied Cecilus; "but since yesterday, my position has undergone a strange complication." "How is that?" asked the lawyer. "How is that?" asked the lawyer. "Cecilius handed him the Prefect's letter and the citation of the pontiffs. Regu'ns feigned to read the two docu-ments with the greatest attention. "This is nothing," he remarked to Ce-cilius, after a pause, and he crumpled the Prefect's letter. "I am particularly ac-quainted with Honoratus Messio, and

His trouble did not escape keydins. The informer distilled with skilled cruelty the words which fell into Cecilius's heart like so many drops of melted lead! "Happily," he resumed, "to all these causes of grave anxiety, there remains the remedy of the noxal abandonment." cillug, aner a parson and particularly ac-Prefect's letter. "I am particularly ac-quainted with Honoratus Messio, and with a word of explanation from me, the matter will be dropped. But this is much more sericus," he added, putting his fore-former on the pontiff's citation. "Is this of unconquerable repugnance,-"How!" cried the tempter, "can you

"Unfortunately it is," faltered Cecilius. " Unfortunately it is," faltered Cecilius. " However, it was not I, but my daughter, who broke the statue of the little god Jugnesitate to give up a daughter who has not feared to expose you to such terrible misfortunes, by her sacrilegious act, and who abandons you to those dangers by her obstinate refusal to abjure her false exect? atirus. "And Parmenon?" remarked Cecilius Your daughter lives with you, and

"Parmenon whom we have forgotten, but who will take possession of me! Even if under your paternal authority?" ask the lawyer, with peculiar emphasis. "Of course she does," replied Cecilus. "Then it amounts to the same thi asked

Then it amounts to the same thing It is the same as if you had committee nenon the sacrilege yourself. Qui vox tua tan-quam filii sicuti filii vox tanquam tua inelligitur, say the jurisconsults in their

"By Jupiter! Is it possible?" exclaimed the poor man. "Did you not understand the quota-tion? Well, let us put manus in the place of vox, and the meaning will be, that thy hand is like the hand of thy son, and the hand of thy son like thine. Is and the hand, it is the penalty?" asked the "And what is the penalty?" asked the wretched Cecilius, with evident anxiety. But Marcus Regulus thinking, probably, that the time had not come to satisfy his client on this point, replied by putting this other superior "Why, unless you should do with Parmenon what you can do with the Pon tiffs."

noxal abandonment!" cried the wretch, with bitter anguish. "Not precisely," said the lawyer, with undisturbed calmness. "The noxal abandonment can only take place when a misdemeanor has been established.

"And what was the motive for this sac-rilege?" "My daughter is a Christian !" "Your daughter is a Christian !" ex-claimed Regulus, with well-assumed as-tonishment, "Oh! this is serious! Very serious! I understand now Honor-ette Messica latter and I don't a misdemeanor has been established. But the law permits us to satisfied a cred-itor by surrendering that which belongs to us. Now, your daughter belongs to you; she is your thing, in law." "So, it is the sale of my daughter to Parmenon which you counsel?" asked very serious: 1 understand now indoor-atus Messio's letter . . and I don't know if he can show himself as lenient-ly disposed as I hoped. No, it is scarce-ly probable. Let us see, however," he resumed; "the case may not be so bad, after all. If your daughter would re-nounce this infamous superstition, I am sure the portifia would pronounce sure the pontiffs would pronounce themselves satisfied. Have you tried to persuade her ? "Alas! yes," replied the unhappy father dejectly; "but I have not succeed-

"You must try again, and by the most energetic means," suggested Regulus, who, before proceeding further, wished to ascertain how far he could go.

ran into the room and sprang joy fully on his knees. It was his son. The wretch caressed the child tenderly, Yet he knew that the Christians had and after playing awhile with him, kissed his fair young brow. allowed themselves to be van-punished by immediate expulsion. There sat the kindly mother, her beau-tiful white hair arranged under her snowy cap, and the eternal beads in her hands. Gliding to and fro, was Margery-a perfect Martha of housewifely neatness and alertness; and Lizzle, the grave, thoughtful Mary of the household; and there was Father Pat, best and kindest truest of friends, to whose arms chiltruest of friends, to whose arms chil-dren sprang for affection, and in whose hands the wildest collie or sheepdog was glad to lay his wet noz-zle, alter he had valorously defended his premises.

COMPOSER NOW A MONK.

Giovanni Spinelli, the Musician, Bees a Franciscan

A remarkable change of occupation in life is that of the Maestro Giovanni Spinelli de Girolamo, a distinguished student of the musical art and re-would amount to the same thing." The unhappy Cecilius was horribly pale. He found nothing to refate in these rigorous consequences which he had not perceived at first, but which now ap-peared perfectly clear to him. Often, in his office of Fiscal Agent, he had exer-cised the same rigor towards unfortunate insolvents, and had caused them to be sold at auction. Why should the pon-tiffs abstain from this uniform means of constraint which the Roman law placed in the hands of all creditors? garded as a master composer. He has just forsaken his occupation and behorribly some a poor Franciscan friar. From his boyhood's years he showed an uncommon genius for music, and his compositions gained several prizes in competition with others, both Italian and foreign. His earlier studies were made under Father Gesualdo da Foggia, of the Friars Minor, or Franciscans, and after seven months' severe application he composed an elegy dedicated to Cardinal Gennaro Portanova. This work, presented at a competition at Paris in 1894, gained a diploma of honor among two hundred and fiftythree competitors. His oratorio, "St. Francis of Assisi," had a great success at London in 1899.

also many other musical compositions bearing his name. Giovanni Spinelli, who began his musical studies under Father Gesualdo of the Friars Minor, by a strange coincidence returns to him and seeks from him the humblest garb of a Friar of St.

Francis. I should surrender my daughter to the pontifis, would that save me from Par-Henceforth he will be known as Fra Guido, a name probably borrowed from Guido, the monk of Arezzo, who "Ah! that is true, there is this Par restored or reformed ecclesiastical music in Italy. The new Fra Guido menon! The judgment is legal, and I do not see how to avoid this difficulty," rewill not be silent in his new life. He plied Regulus. "It is to-day," resumed Cecilius, "that will present at times to the pub-"It is to-day," resumed Ceclius, "that Parmenon is to demand what I owed Gurges; and if I do not pay him—which must happen, for I have not hundred sestertii—I must expect—" "To be sold within the legal delay, be-yond the Tiber," added Regulue. "This, in fact, is unavoidable, unless—" "Unless what?" asked Cecilius anxi-ously. lic some of his own compositions, together with those of Don Lorenzo Persi and that other Franciscan friar, Father Hartmann, whose oratorio of St. Peter " recently created such enthusiasm in Rome. It is interesting to note the fact that at the present moment in Italy three members of the clergy - those just named-are highly distinguished as composers of religious music. - Balti-more Sun. "The noxal abandonment! always the

A member of the Irish Protestant Church writes in the current number of the Church Times in the following terms as to the marvelous vitality of the Catholic Church in his country : "The recuperative power of the "So, it is the sale of my daughter to Parmenon which you counsel?" asked Cecilius dejectedly, but with some indig-Roman Church in Ireland is marvelous. In the year 1649 there were in the country twenty-two Bishops and four Cecting dejeterry, and nation, "I counsel nothing," replied Regulus. "You come here to consult me, in your embarassments, and I suggest the only means by which you can get out of them. Do as you please; what concern of mine is it? The gods are witness that have Archbishops. In the Cathedrals there were as usual dignitaries and canons ; the parishes had pastors, a great num-ber of secular priests and numerous convents of regulars. But after Crom-As he said these words, a young child well had attained to supreme power all these were scattered. Over 300 were these were scattered. Over 300 were put to death, 1,000 more were driven into exile. Four Bishops were killed in the Cromwellian campaign in Ire delightful supremacy. By holding aloof and talk ily, as if the ballot box we notice, and saying they d vote at all, they found courted on all sides, and eloquent style by the rival and their backers. Ther pretty tall talk at the Mid tion, 1 can tell you, and a it was never reported in but Raymond Fox won Foy. a veteran who had co the '48 and '97 troubles, an as his conviction that the would go to the scaffold f That clinched the n try. That clinched the n There were two or the but old Phil carried all ob The word was given in th ter and Raymond headed was on Phil's support that oning when he promised and back Moriarity at the One of these days the fo was enacted at the door village in the County Cla tage was the residence and he leaned over the h ing contentedly, till a str tellow came up from the turbed his serenity by a newspaper as he appro "What's on the pape

JUNE 2: 1900

JUNE 2, 1900.

HIS STEWARDSHIP.

When the London England pa announced that Raymond Fox, M for Mid-Clare, had applied for steward hip of the Chiltern Hundr other men in Parliament were much surprised. His engagement been very apparent, as his pi fiancee, far from trying to allure from his political duties to society alities, had herself developed an sorbing interest in politics, and frequently to be seen dining in House and having tes on the ter and even sitting through dull de behind the grille of the Ladies' Ga with an aunt who would have int ly preferred the opera. And th did on the chance of hearing mond open his eloquent lips for f so sympathetic, why did his en ment entail his retirement from Her father, though an Irishman supporter of the same political was yet eminently pratical, and ing made his way in the wor sired to have as a son in law a who could do the same. He had it the sole condition of his cont the engagement that Raymond leave Parliament till he had pu self in a position of independe exercise of his profession.

Raymond had been called Irish bar, but had never pre He felt confident, however, ti would be plain sailing. He tained a reputation as an ora all round clever fellow, was also nlar hero in a way, owing to inent part he had taken in an affray in which the police c second best. So there was fir a private conference with the and then a confidential talk party leader and the whip, an unanimously decided that the the whip, " and have money on an election contest, never d ve'll find a seat you can figh

Raymond assured them th

Clare was safe, and promise down and back their candidat be of some use to him with t side men,'" he added with a smile. "I flatter myself I have fluence in that quarter." shook hands with him in lation, and he went off elated sult with Molly and Molly's fa the prospects of a speedy w Thus was it that the p about the Chiltern Hundreds the papers. It created no in London, and, in fact, app very backward corner of th but copied into a more promi ition in the Dublin and Iris cial press it produced, as hear, a ruction such as the p dreamed of on the day when and the whip decided that F safely go, and that the sea

Now, be it known to you mond Fox owed that seat simply to the favor of the men." This section of the con though disavowing all par agitation in favor of stron ures, found themselves in a for Moriarity.

1 suppose Mid Clare is safe party

When you are a rich ma ment was to be sanctioned .

But, you may ask, if the woma

Well, this was the way

ten minutes.

ment?

wise than appear before the pretor. He there found Parmenon, who had taken care not to forget his register.

The pretor requested Parmenon to swear, according to the provisions of the law, that in bringing this suit he had not been actuated by a feeling of chicanery or revenge, and that he did not claim more than was due to him.

Parmenon hastened to take the required oath

Aufidius Namusa then told him to state Aunques Namusa then told him to state his claim, and to show Cecilius his regis-ter. These two formalities having been complied with, the pretor invited Cecilius to declare whether he acknowledged the debt, or if he denied it, to state upon what council what grounds. Cecilius admitted that he owed ten Cecilius admitted that he owed ten thousand scetteril to Gurges; but re-marked that he could not understand why Gurges should have transferred his claim to Parmenon, unless it were through motives of revenge because Cecilia had refused to marry him. This argument had little weight in law.

Cecilia had refused to marry him. This argument had little weight in law. "Dico," said the pretor, which was affirm-ing Parmenon's right. "Consequently," he continued, "I adjudge the body of Cecilius to the said Parmenon."

And he ordered the crier to call the next case. " I don't understand," faltered Cecilius, rolling his ear between his fingers,-a way embarrassed people have had from "You don't understand !" quoted Par-menon, brutally, as he retired. "It means that if by to morrow you have not paid me ten thousand sestertii, I shall put my hand on your tunic, and you will belong to me!"

Cecilius began to comprehend; but ten thousand sestertii are no small sum poor man to find, and the wretched tax-gatherer saw no issue to his dilemma. "This farmenon has gained his suit very easily," remarked[a stranger who had followed the case with interest, and who was walking by the side of Cecilius. " Marcus Regulus shrugged his shoulders when he heard the jndgment." Cecilius heard the remark, and con-minude home.

"And Parmenon ?" "Parmenon will have no power when his claim is satisfied.

"By hercules ! The girl has a charm his hiding-place in the barbers tepldar-ium, had admirably served his purpose, for he had acquired the certainty that Flavia Domitilla was a Christian, enter-taining relations with the Jews of Capena interpret and the same time, had had ing, easy way of arringing things " rice Cecilius, with bitter irony. "Indeed, i is foolish in me to feel alarmed! Oh how like the way of those perfidious Jews this is! They have a ready answer for the most difficult questions! Unfortu-nate child !" added the father, addressing taining relations with the Jews of Capena gate; and, at the same time, he had learned the name of the young girl through whom it would be easy,—so he thought, at least,—to penetrate the mys-teries he was so anxious to discover. But, before all, he musthave the girl in his power. If this might have seemed difficult to others, it was nothing for a difficult to the Marga Paralae. His plan his daughter with a certain tenderness "can you not understand that all is los f you persist in proclaiming yourself a hristian ! and that all is saved if you ab ure at the feet of the Pontiffs !" tactician like Marcus Regulus. His plan

"Father," said Cecilia, in a firm and respectful tone, "do not expect that I shall ever renounce the religion of Christ. Batter die then." Better die, than-'

"What ! you would persist in this inamous creed, at the risk of destroying amous creed, at the risk of destroying your own prospects, and, what you do not seem to care much about, at the risk of consuminating your father's ruin, and, perhaps, of imperilling his liberty and his bigs un hife!" "It would be a dreadful thing, O my father! it would be for me a source of everlasting sorrow, if I should be the cause of your misfortune! but, I repeat it, you are unnecessarily alarmed, and—"

"And ?" asked Cecilins, trembling with fear and rage, "And? . . . Pro-

"Oh, father ! take my life,—it belongs to you,—and I would be happy to lay it down for you; but do not ask of me a sacrifice which I cannot make." expecting him, when his nomenclator in-troduced Cecilia's unhappy father in his exedre, or consultation room. A single window admitted the light in Sacrince which I caunot make. Cecilius, pale with rage, was fearful to behold. He raised his hand as if to strike or curse his daughter ! But a sudden thought made him withhold the blow.

You are no longer my daughter !" he exclaimed vehemently: "no, by all the gods; I disown you! But I shall crush you, as I crush this vase, which, like you, is mine !

Ceived a hope.
Who is this Marcus Regulus, and what did he say ?? asked the unfortunate suiter, approaching the stranger.
Marcus Regulus is the first lawyer of Rome," replied the latter, " and he was aaving that he would have compelled to B Parmonon to carry away his register without obtaining anything."
"Indeed !! exclaimed Cecilius; " Marcus Regulus said this ? Is he still in the Forca ?"
" Father ! Father !' said Cecilia imploringly.
" What is it you wish to say ? That you renounce this cursed superstition ?" asked Cecilius, looking at her with a madman's gaza.
" Never !!' said the young girl, making a supreme effort; and, overcome by her emotion, she fell, sobbing bitterly, on a test.
Her father cast on her a glance full of the sadness and bitter sorrow, and left her the same superstition ?"

quished. In Nero's time he had been witness to their contempt for life, and the immovable intrepidity of their faith. The conversation between Gurges and Eutrapeles, overheard by Regulus from his hiding-place in the barber's tepidar-

"By the gods! I will do it," said Ceci-lius; "may they grant me better success. But this cannot be! It is use less to hope! . . . What," he ad . . . But this cannot be! It is use-less to hope! . . . What," he ad-ded, looking anxiously at the lawyer, "is there no other means?" "Oh! there are always means," said "Oh! there are always means," said

Regulus. "But there are some means which are too harsh for a father to use, however inevitable they may be," he added, with deep commiseration. "And what means are those ?" inquired the wretched man, overcome by his anguish.

"There is the noxal abandonment," re was promptly conceived, and he made the most of every circumstance mentioned by the vespillo. He imagined, first, to "Inere is the boxal abandonment," re-plied the lawyer, watching his client's features, to see the effect of this sugges-tion. And perceiving that Cecilius did not seem to understand, he added, by the vespino. He imagined, his, to bring forward Parmenon, in order that he might have a hold on Cecilius, who, being without resources, must fear for his not seem to understand, he added, — "The law is not so unjust and absurd as to make the father necessarily respon-sible in his own person, for the misdeeds of his child. This severing of the legal is to might be used in the severing of the legal Then he completed his lan of campaign against the poor tax-gatherer by the Prefect's letter, and the citation before ie, to which I have just alluded, is poss ble for the father who does not wish that his daughter's crime should be visited the Pontiff's court; for, the reader must have surmised it, these documents found by Cecilius on his return home, had been upon him. It is done by surrendering the child to those who have made the by certified in its feeting house, that bees sent at this arch-plotter's suggestion. He it was who had sent the officious stranger to the Forum to lead the defsat-ed pleader into the snare, by showing him Marcus Regulus as the only man complaint.

Cecilius bounded on his seat. "What!" he cried, "I would surrende could save him from Parmenon

"What!" he cried, "I would surrender my daughter to the pontiffs? And what would they do with her?" "What will you? It must be you or she, or rather both of you," retorted Regulus, coolly, noxa caput sequitur, un-less the separation takes place." "How can this be, and to what danger are we avored?" who could save him from Parmenon. Marcus Regulus now felt sure that Ce-cilius would come, and he was confidently are we exposed ?" "You are not threatened with persona

"You are not threatened with personal punishment; and yet it is pretty much the same thing," said Regulus. "What punishment do you mean? What will amount to the same thing? In the name of the gods, explain your words, my Lord Regulus," cried the wretched father, raising his hands in sup-plication.

A single window admitted the light in this vast room, around which were placed purple-covered seats or beds for the visit-ors. The four angles were occupied by the brazen statues of Apollo, the god of eloquence and poetry; of Minerva, the goddess of science and wisdom; of Her-cules, the emblem of strength; and of Capid, the god of love and the symbol of literary. Above the seats, and running up as high as the hand could reach, could be seen a number of little balls, some gilded, and the others simply made of wood, of plication. "Listen to me, then," said the lawyer And, seizing an amphora upon the table, he dashed it on the floor. "Father! Father!" said Cecilia im-ploringly. "What is it you wish to say? That you repent? That you renounce this cursed superstition?" asked Cecilias, "Never!" said the young girl, making a supreme effort; and, overcome by her emotion, she fell, sobbing bitterly, on a teat. Her father cast on her a glance full of sadness and bitter sorrow, and left her

TO BE CONTINUED.

THE PRIEST'S MEMORY OF HIS CHILDHOODS HOME.

Here is a beautiful dream-picture from the Rev. P. A. Sheehan's Luk Delmege : Idiota," current in the American Ecclesiastical Review : The image remained imprinted on the retentive retina of Luke's memory for many a day, and came up, amongst strange scenes and sights, to comfor him with its holy beauty. Often, in after years, when sitting at the tables of noblemen, who traced their blood back to the invakers, who bit the sands at Hastings, that cloud dream of his sea side home rose soft and beautiful as a piece of enchantment raised to the witchery of soft music ; and often, on the streets of Southwark at midnight, when the thunder of the mighty stream of humanity rolled turbid and stormy along the narrow streets, did he see, as in a far off picture, narrowed in the perspective of memory, the white farm-house above the breakers, and the calm, beautiful, twilight holiness that slept above it-a canopy of peace and rest. He saw the two windows that ventilated the parlor-the one looking northward over soft gray meadows and golden cornfields, that stretched away till they were lost in the purple and blue of the shadowy, mysterious moun tains; the other looking southward over masses of purple heather, to where tains; the other the everlasting sea shimmered in silver all day long, and put on its steel blue armor against the stars of night. There was the tea table, with its cups and saucers and its pile of dainty griddle-cakes, cut in squares, and fresh from the hands of Margery and golden butter, the best that was made in the Golden Vale; and thick, rich cream; and fragrant strawber-ries, nestling in their grape-like leaves. And there was his good father, a stern old Irish Catholic of the

Puritan type, silent and God fearing and just, who never allowed a day to pass without an hour of silent com-munion with God, in his bedroom after the midday meal, and on whose lands the slightest whisper of indelicacy was land ; the others were all obliged to fly to foreign countries, except the Bishop of Kilmore, who was too feeble to be removed. In 1641 there were in Ireland forty-three houses of the Domini-ican Order and 600 religious. Ten years after there was not a single house in their possession, and three fourths of these religious were dead or in exile. There was no doubt great provoca-tion in the massacre of 1641, which brought Cromwell to Ireland as the avenger of blood, but the retaliation was terrible. In 1657 the newly appointed Vicar Apostolic of Dablin, Dr. James Dempsey, wrote to the Pope of the period : 'Dublini non sunt tot Catholici quot constituerlini tres Parochias. There are not in Dablin Diocese Catholics enough to form three parishes. The Catholic population of this diocese now is probably not under 400,000."

THE CHURCH'S GREATEST ENEMY .--The great enemy against which the Church has had to contend is ignorance of the constitution and charter of the Catholic Church. It is ignorance which makes some men narrowminded; it is ignorance which makes Catholics disloyal to the Holy and Apostolic See ; it is ignorance which exposes the children of Catholic parents to be led away, flattered and seduced by erroneous opinions, and carried away by corrupt doctrines. It is ignorance which is the parent of all crime. - American Herald.

The pagan who simply believed in the myth of Jupiter, Alemens and Hercules, much more he who had been initiated into the unspeakable names of Bacchus and Persephone, knew more of living Christian doctrine than any "Christian" who refuses to call Mary the "Mother of God." Well might Wordsworth lament that he was "suckled in a creed outworn (though it was only three hundred years old) and long that he might Have sight of Proteus rising from the Sea. Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn. -Coventry Patmore.

"He that seeks finds." He that takes Hood's Sarsaparilla finds in its use pure, rich blood and consequently good health. Helloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

shouted in a hearty vo up, man, an' tell uswar?" Phil was always for a "furrin' war ;" t none to answer his exp his long lifetime. The was a deadly disappoint had hardly recovered fr

"No chance of was shouted Danpy, "but h that will astonish you there was." "What, then? Don off me. What is it at a "This," said Denny "Misther Raymond F us all to vote for, and our skulls cracked for, his sate, that's all.

" Hoorah !" said old "the boy was too good belongs to us by rights Hould on till ye Denny, and he shook ously; "ye were too o ily taken in, Phil. Running his finger d he found the place and " ' The London pap