"ADDING OUR CRIME TO THEIRS."

In the face of these examples, taken from British history, how is it possible to contend that the doctrine of the British Parliament and Government is that there should be no investigation during the war?

In view of all these facts; in view of the declarations which were made the other day by the honorable member for Richmond; in view of the indefensible acts of the Shell Committee, is there any reason why we should have only a partial investigation, or why we should not have a thorough, complete and immediate investigation?

Sir, if wrong-doing is to be prevented, every matter of wrong-doing should be exposed without fear, without favor, without affection wherever found. Is there any one in this country greater than the great Duke of Marlborough?

The machine gun muddle is not cleared up yet. Over a million and a quarter dollars has been subscribed and paid into the treasury but up to the present the Government has positively refused to tell what has been done with the money or how many, if any, machine guns have been purchased.

MR. KYTE'S SPEECH.

It is not too much to say that Mr. Kyte's speech is one of the most important, both in its exposure of the widespread graft operations of Allison et al, and in its effect upon the country, that has ever been made in the Canadian Parliament.

When Mr. Carvell and Mr. Pugsley made their startling charges earlier in the session, the answer of the Government was that there was nothing to investigate. When Sir Wilfrid Laurier presented his resolution calling for an investigation, the answer of the Government was that the Canadian Government was not responsible, and that it was a matter with which the Imperial authorities alone could deal.

Even this, there is reason to believe, would not have moved Sir Robert Borden to action. But he was immediately confronted with a political crisis and a revolt of twenty or more of his own followers who refused to give their support to any further stifling of the series of charges which has staggered the Canadian people.

Mr. Kyte's speech has disclosed the imperative need for a wide open inquiry, involving every phase of these huge contracts. The serious character of the charges laid before the House furnished the reason why the veteran Conservative member for Dundas, Hon. Andrew Broder, was constrained to abandon the party associations of a life-time, and join with Sir Wilfrid Laurier in voting for a complete and thorough-going investigation by a committee of Parliament.

In these days anything that can carry a cargo across the Atlantic is a potential gold mine. About three years ago the steamship Dunholme burned at a New Jersey pier. A wrecking company paid $30,000 for the blackened hulk. Last month the vessel, although it had not then been put into seaworthy condition, was sold for $850,000.

The rumor that Sir Sam Hughes has been "tipped off" not to hurry home sounds quite probable. If the Minister of Militia is to be thrown to the wolves, at the demand of his enemies in the government camp, Sir Robert Borden naturally would be anxious to prorogue Parliament before General Hughes' return.

"The desire for going often ashore is one that is apt to wear off with length of service in the navy," says a fleet chaplain in the Westminster Gazette. "I have known men, especially men of the lower deck, who have spent a three-year commission on a foreign station without once leaving the ship."

All the members of the captured German airship's crew have expressed satisfaction with the treatment accorded them," says a London despatch. This is pleasing news. English hospitality to week-end visitors is well known, and was not lacking in this case.

Professor James Mark Baldwin, of Baltimore, whose daughter was seriously injured in the torpedoing of the cross channel steamship Sussex, has sent the following cable from Paris to President Wilson:

"A woman travelling where her right was, carrying an American passport, stricken on the Sussex, hovering between life and death, demands that reparation for assault on American life and liberty be exacted."

This moving appeal may become one of the historic documents of Mr. Wilson's administration. Never before has the issue been put so squarely up to the President. Can he resist it?

TAKE HOME A SMILE. Take home a smile; forget the petty cares. The dull, grim grind of all the day's affairs; The day is done, come be yourself awhile, Tonight to those who wait, take home a smile.

Take home a smile, don't scatter grief and gloom Where laughter and light hearts should always bloom; What though you've travelled many a dusty mile Footsore and weary, still take home a smile.

Take home a smile—it is not much to do, But much it means to them who wait for you. You can be brave for such a little while, The day of doubt is done—take home a smile. —Edgar A. Guest, in Detroit Free Press.
