

TO-DAY

in medicine, as in every other necessity, the public is satisfied with nothing but the best! This explains the ever-increasing demand for Zam-Buk. Not only is this great balm the best household remedy to-day, but it is also the most economical.

Zam-Buk's superiority is due to the fact that it is all medicine, containing none of the coarse animal fats or harsh mineral drugs found in ordinary ointments. Again, the medicinal properties are so highly concentrated that they contain the maximum amount of healing, soothing and antiseptic power, so that a little of this balm goes a long way.

Another reason why Zam-Buk is most economical. It will keep indefinitely and retain to the last its strength and purity. Best for skin diseases and injuries, blood-poisoning and piles. All dealers, 50c. box.

CITY OF MYSTERY.

None Have Read Picture-Writings of Copan.

Copan is a city of mystery. The people who once thronged its streets and bowed at its altars are long since gone, leaving no record of their existence save the moony stones of their city. These stones, built into pyramids, walls and monuments, bear their story carved in the Maya characters. But no descendants have survived to interpret the stories, and no scholar has arisen wise enough to read the picture-writings of Copan.

Ruling of this oldest city of the Maya Indians may still be seen by those sufficiently persistent and enthusiastic to seek them out. A little Indian village in western Honduras, and the river on which it lies keep the name of Copan alive to-day. To visit the ruins of the great Copan you must seek out this village by train and then so a long journey on horse-back. Just beyond the village lies the old Maya metropolis.

The only inhabitants of Copan to-day are queer figures of the Maya gods, that peer out of unexpected hiding places like the creatures of a bad dream. Wonderfully carved many of them are, grotesque in attitude and expression, according to the artists' conception of the beings of the other world.

When Copan flourished, how it fell, and what became of its last people, no one knows. The city is as desolate as only a deserted city can be, oppressive and sad even in the bright sunlight of a tropical mid-day.—"Niksah," in Indianapolis Star.

LOYAL TILL DEATH.

South African Ostrich is a True Monogamist.

Fifty-five years ago the ostrich was not a domesticated bird in South Africa. True, a few wild ostriches had been captured and kept in captivity for private or public exhibition, but no attempt appears to have been made to farm them seriously. The few ostrich feathers that reached European markets were from wild ostriches, and, commercially, were considered much damaged. Nevertheless they fetched over high prices, which naturally drew the attention of South Africa to the possibilities of the ostrich-feather trade.

The more venturesome stock-breeders and speculators practically started the present extensive ostrich farming industry by offering very high prices for eggs, chicks, or full-grown birds. The Kalahari—the favorite haunt of the wild ostrich—was searched for eggs and chicks, but the demand for some time continued to exceed the supply.

In a comparatively very short time hundreds of domesticated or half-wild ostriches were successfully reared, partly with the help of incubators; but the loss by death through lack of experience was for a long time considerable. Fortunately this drawback has since been largely overcome by the application of new methods, which, taken in conjunction with greater attention to selection for breeding purposes, has put South African ostrich farming foremost in the world.

In the life of the ostrich there are some characteristics that deserve mention, because they have been frequently misstated or misunderstood.

In the wild or natural state ostriches pair in the spring. Once paired, they remain paired "till death doth them part." The female, or hen bird, makes a shallow hollow in the ground away from water-courses for her nest. During the sitting period the male remains on the nest by night, the female by day. As the eggs are in greater danger of wild animals by night this mutual arrangement between the parent birds is as obvious as it is instructive. On the approach of danger, the parent bird sitting on the nest will put its neck and head flat on the ground in front of it, for by doing so it can be easily mistaken for an ant-heap or low bush. Even while going in search of food it may resort to this deception.

In the domestic state they retain the characteristic. In course of time they will no doubt cease to be monogamists—a fate that seems ever to await animals selected by man for domestic use.—Family Herald.

MARCH WEATHER DANGEROUS TO BABY

Our Canadian March weather—one day bright, but sloppy, the next blustery and cold—is extremely hard on children. Conditions make it necessary for the mothers to keep the little ones indoors. They are often confined to overheated, badly ventilated rooms and catch colds which rack their whole system. To guard against these colds and to keep the baby well till the better, brighter days come along, a box of Baby's Own Tablets should be kept in the house and an occasional dose given the baby to keep his stomach and bowels working regularly. The Tablets are a mild but thorough laxative which never fail to regulate the stomach and bowels and thus they relieve colds and simple fevers and keep the baby fit. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE GNU

Has the Most Terrible of All Voices.

Few people know what a satisfactory animal is the gnu. Quite a number of hooved animals, like the ibex and the sacred ox, are more tiresome combination of Burbankisms, but the gnu has qualities all his own. His head is homely to an unpainted barn—flat nose and very broad mouth and ears misshapen and unattractive. His body is that of an exceedingly powerful, full pony, with strong neck and rakish tail. His galvanic energy puts to shame the glorious abandon of a cat on a tin roof.

When I arrive before his enclosure, he has usually retired to the shed in which he sleeps, and stands in the doorway with faraway eyes. Efforts to entice him forth are futile. I turn at last as if to go, and as I move, he bursts forth with the most heathenish cry that ever clattered from an animal throat. It resembles anything it is the trench klaxon that warns of an impending gas attack—a series of staccato shrieks which would shake the teeth from a band saw. I don't see how he can stand the noise he makes. Arm a rabbit with the voice of a gnu and lions will slink from his path.

Reaching the bars of his enclosure in three or four astounding leaps, the gnu halts, with head averted and feet wide apart, ignoring me utterly. When I move to right or left, he remains motionless until fifteen feet are between us, then he closes the distance with a bound, shrieks terribly twice or thrice, and once more affects to be utterly oblivious of my presence. When finally I leave him, the clatter of his fearful voice pursues me for hundreds of feet, drowning all other sounds.—Atlantic Monthly.

WOMEN WHO KILL.

A Few of Them Have Been Real Mercenaries.

Do women commit cold-blooded murder? That there have been thousands of women killers within a generation we know. But are their slayings not always either what the French call crimes passionnels, or killings of revenge, or homicide? French call crimes passionnels, or crimes due to pathological conditions—insanity, neurosis, hysteria or epilepsy? In a word, do women kill, as countless men in every age and clime have killed, for exclusively mercenary motives and with calm premeditation?

These old but ever fresh questions are revived by the confession and life-long sentence of Mrs. Amy E. Archer Gilligan in Connecticut. A few days since this mature woman herself brought to an end a three years' fight against charges of the state which inferentially involved the deaths of perhaps 40 human beings.

This woman was not emotionally or erotically concerned with any of her victims. At no point was any hatred or passion against any one shown. She tried to plead insanity, but repeated examining boards of physicians found her all too sane. She had simply murdered a number, and perhaps a very large number, of old men and women to profit a few hundred dollars extra on each trucidation.

A complete and perfect Borgia, one with few parallels.

But if Lucretia Borgia's record, true or fabulous, in no way compares to this story, there are other women along the backwaters of history, old and new, whose doings will add evidence to support the truth that woman can kill and does kill as calmly and consciously as man.

The celebrated Marie d'Aubray, Marquise de Brinvilliers, 1630-76, is one of the best examples from olden times. Having exhausted her husband's fortune and disposed of him, she poisoned her mother, father and other relatives in startling succession, to possess herself of their money. She finally poisoned her lover by mistake, was caught and decapitated. The only crime of her many in which any emotional elements were at play was her last, and it was more accident than crime.

France has had a number of other examples. Marie Bompard, that abysmal child of crime, will be example sufficient. In 1880 this young girl formed a plot with her lover, one Eyraud, to lure Gouffe, a rich notary, into an apartment and there strangle

h. m. She went from Paris to London with Eyraud and there bought the paraphernalia of her crime—a large trunk and a strong colored cord to match a dressing gown. With this equipment she and her lover returned and then she led the smitten Gouffe into her room and sat in his lap in a chair. She slipped the strong cord of her gowns about his neck and remarked what a lovely necktie it would make. That was the signal. Eyraud, hidden behind a drapery, tugged at the cord. In a few minutes Gouffe was dead. His body was hidden in the trunk and she sat beside it all night. She and her paramour were caught after prolonged search. Indeed, she brazenly walked in the prefect's office and said she had heard he was looking for her, hoping to shift the blame to Eyraud. Both finally were convicted. The girl had done her crime only to get money.

Da Vinci Thought of Tank.

Italy has just celebrated the fourth centenary of Leonardo du Vinci's death. His name has often been mentioned during the war and his prophetic genius recalled. It is known that he intended to build airplanes for war purposes, but it is now claimed also that he was the first to think of the tank. In his letters to Il Moro he speaks of armored cars which could shelter the occupants and drive right amongst the enemy's masses, slaying and shattering all opposition. It is unfortunate that more is not known of Leonardo's intentions, and of the way in which he proposes to propel his craft. Horses might possibly have been intended, for if a horse could carry less weight than the armored motor, protection in these days was more easily got than now. But it is certainly very singular to read that his cars were to charge ahead while the infantry would follow behind—for this is exactly what happened four hundred years after his death.—Manchester Guardian.

Placing the Whale.

Scientists class the whale as a mammal, but the Board of United States general appraisers in New York has ruled that whale meat is fish, for purpose of levying import taxes.

The whale meat which was the subject of the discussion was imported at Seattle, and was classified by the customs officers as "fish in tin packages not specially provided for" and duty was levied at the rate of 15 per cent. ad valorem. Importers contended that the merchandise was meat, and in a lengthy decision there was not a single fact to support statements that the flesh of the whale, if it is meat, is ordinarily accepted as a meat of commerce.

"It is as meat," said the board, "is so limited that we have the right to accept it as conclusive that commerce has not placed it in the domain of meat; therefore we must give it the meaning understood by ordinary people of common intelligence."—The Nation's Business.

Hardening Metal.

It is well known that rapid cooling of hot metals hardens them. That the opposite is true has recently been demonstrated in striking fashion by the General Electric Company. One of their scientists annealed American ingot iron surrounded by hydrogen gas for three hours at a temperature above 1,600 degrees Fahrenheit. The product was very little harder than the softest copper and can be whittled with ease.
