Admiral Palliser, retired, of the British navy; Col. Carter, of the British army, and several other friends of Earl Fitzwilliam, to the famous treasure island off the Pacific coast of Costa Rica.

The earl stopped at Jamaica, and took on two expert miners and sixteen negro laborers. The steamer finally got to Cocos after a rough trip around the Horn. When the party got to the island an old German who was about the only resident of the place, told the Englishmen that if they looked in the right place they could find £6,000,000 of treasure, and a golden statue of a goddess robed in a costume of royal treasure, and a golden statue of a goddess robed in a costume of royal gems. The German said that he guessed the statue was buried under a cliff that overlooked the sea.

The miners prepared to blow up the cliff and get at the statue in that way, but a premature blast blew the top of the cliff down on them. Those who escaped went to work to dig out their comrades, assisted by the earl. There was a landslide which buried the earl and his men in the sand and gave him a fracturin the sand and gave him a fractured skull. A dozen of the men were sent to the American hospital at Ancon, Panama. As soon as the earl was able to travel he and his friends went back home.
