The Old Gray Mare

By GEO. M. BILLINGS.

Copyright, 1901, by A. S. Richardson.

Farmer John Carter had fed the pigs. shut the henhouse door and come around on to the side veranda to smoke his evening pipe with his wife, Nancy, who sat in the big rooking chair. She had placed his pipe and tobacco within easy reach. Farmer John sat down with a grunt, rubbed at his stiff knee a minute, and then, instead of filling his pipe he slowly turned to his wife and said: "Nancy, I want to know what's wrong with our Milly."

"What on earth do you mean?" exclaimed the wife and ceased rocking so suddenly that she almost shot out

"Don't try to fool me," he continued as he slowly shook his head. "I ain't been askin' no questions before, but I seen for two or three weeks that things was wrong with Milly."

"She's been kind o' draggy since she got wet goin' to camp meetin', but I don't think we ought to have a doctor,

"I think, Nancy," he slowly replied after a half minute- "I think I'm goin" to find out what's the matter with Milly, and if you won't tell me I'll go over and have a few words with Sile Johnson. Mebbe he knows." "How should he know?" asked Nan-

"Dunno, but I guess I'll walk over there tonight." "Well, I guess you won't. John Carter, why can't you mind your own cy as she rocked furiously.

"Dunno, but I want to see Sile John-"You are always pokin' around and makin' an old hen huzzy of yourself, and I expect you'll get up and put on one of my dresses some mornin'. Now, then, bein' you are so full of curiosity, lemme tell you somethin'. Our Milly and Sile have had a tiff." "Had a row, eh?" queried John, as he settled himself down to hear the particulars. "No, sir, they haven't!" she snapped "I said a tiff, and there's a heap of difference between a tiff and a row."

"But they got mad at each other?" "Yes, they did, and I'm backin' Milly for all I'm worth. You know the day she went over to Eli Warner's to see Sarah? Well, there was a windmill man at Warner's that day, and because the two girls sung the 'Sweet By and By' while he played on the organ Silas called Milly a flirt."

"And she got mad?" "Of course." "And he got mad?"

"Of course." "And he hasn't been here for two weeks, and Milly is goin' around look- standing under a shed in the barnyard in' as if she wanted to die? I must go over bein' mad and wants to be friends

"What! What! John Carter, are you a born fool?" almost shouted Nancy, as she rose from her chair. "Don't you dare stir one single step! You'd make a pretty muss of things if they was left to you, wouldn't you?"

"But something has got to be done," he protested with anxious voice. "Milly and Sile have been lovin' each other over two years, and we mustn't let 'em fall out over a little thing like that." "What's got to be done, for one thing, is for you to keep out of it. Milly has got a mother, and that mother sits right here, and what she don't know about lovers' quarrels you needn't try to learn her. Now, you mind what I teil you. I'm expectin' Sile Johnson will come sneakin' around any day, but if he does don't you say one word about the quarrel. Jest treat him as if you didn't know anything had happened. He begun the quarrel, and he's got to be the one to eat hum-

"But suppose he sticks out about it and busts up the marriage?" "I shan't suppose nothin' of the sort. If he doesn't fall off the barn and break his neck, he'll be back here and very humble within two weeks." Mrs. Nancy Carter thought she knew young Silas Johnson pretty well and that he didn't differ much from the generality of lovers, but she was mistaken. He was an obstinate young man, and, though it caused him loss of sleep and appetite, he refused to be the first to give in. One word from Milly would have brought him over to the Carter farmhouse on the jump, but, backed by a feeling of injury and her mother, she refused to speak it. It thus came about that the "tiff" threatened to have disastrous consequences and there was a possibility of two lives being wrecked. One evening when she was forced to realize this Nancy quietly asked of her hus-

"John, did you see Silas anywhere around when you was passin' the farm the other day?"

"Yes," was the reply. "He was mildin' a fence jest beyond the barn. is it all off between Milly and him?" "Can't say whether 'tis or not. Did you ever know our old gray mare to run away?"

"Lands, no! Nothin' on earth would scare her." "But if somethin' did, John? If Milly was drivin' her to town and she ran away, what would happen?" "She'd probably stop for breath after goin' about five rods," laughed the husband.

"She wouldn't kick the wagon to pieces or kill Milly?" "She might fetch up in a fence cor ner and bump her own head, but I guess that would be the worst of it. What's up, Nancy?"

"Nothin' for you to know. You jest keep quiet and lemme work this thing out by myself. Milly's goin' to town after a darnin' needle and a spool of black thread after dinner tomorrer, and she'll drive the old mare."

After dinner next day the horse was hitched to a light wagon and left until wanted. When Milly was ready for her trip, the outfit around, taking much more time seemed necessary. Moreover, when the old mare, who had passed her twentieth birthday, was brought up at the gate she was what Milly called "wriggly"-that is, she was nervous and restless and evidently full of go. She had to be held by the bit antil the girl got in and secured the lines. "She acts real colty today," said the mother as she patted the mare's nose, "but she'll steady down before you get away in her life, but if she should do

"I guess I won't go," interrupted

"You go right along. As I was sayin' if she should run away you hold her steady in the middle of the road and scream for help. Now let her g'lang." The old gray mare moved off with a rush, and for a quarter of a mile she maintained a pace to surprise her driv-er. Then she suddenly gave a squeal and broke into a run. Milly dropped the lines and clung to the seat, and she also remembered her mother's injunction to scream. Silas Johnson was still working on the fence "jest beyond the barn." He was also calling himself a fool and thinking he would give five years of his life to make up with Milly when he heard screams and a clatter

It is none of the reader's affair whether he resolved to do or die, whether he made a hero of himself or not, whether the "wriggly" old mare was glad of an excuse to stop or made frantic efforts to continue her wild flight. It is sufficient that he stopped her, that the screaming Milly fell into Public vehicles in Paris are allowed to carry only as many passengers as can find seats. After that number has been admitted no one is allowed to enter. The explanation will serve to introduce an incident reported by a correspondent of the Pittsburg Dispatch. A crowd of men and women, each with a numbered ticket showing the order in which they were to enter the next street car, stood at the Place de Etoile station when the downtown car arrived.

Surveying the crowd, the conductor cried out: "Only three places in the car! Who has ticket No. 1?"

FOOLING THE EXPERTS.

"I am convinced that few people know anything about diamonds, no matter how much they may pose as experts," said a young business man the other day. "A recent experience of mine has forced me to this conclusion. I bought for my wife a brooch containing a cluster of diamonds and took occasion to show it to several of my friends at the club. They examined it very closely, looked wise and then started to show me where my judgment had been at fault. Every man in the crowd seemed to be a diamond expert. By the time they had got through I really felt as though I had been bunkoed and was considera-

Wyclif could not go to the original texts, so he translated from the Vulgate, or accepted Latin version. It was not a perfect performance, but the reformer was prevented by death from revising it, as he doubtless to tended to do.

The revision, therefore, was undertaken by John Purvey and completed in 1388. It is curious that the whole of Wyclif's Bible was not printed as one book until 1850, when it was published under the editorial care of the Rev. Josiah Forshall and Sir Frederic
