Roast Beef and Olives.

By RUTH CAMERON.

"The trouble is, Jinny, that I can't always make you out. I never know where I am with you."
 "Yes," said Jinny complacently, "but you can never never exhaust me. There's always more where I come from."
 Do you like people who have moods or do you like people whom you always know just where to find? I don't care very much for Mrs. Cameron's friend of mine said to me the other night, "she's such a person for moods. One day you meet her she is as cordial and interesting that you have a wonderful time with her and the next day she hardly has anything to say at all. I can't get along with people who blow hot and then blow cold like that. I want them one thing or another."

The World Needs The "Promises" quite as much as the "Sulphides." I know the sort of person she means. We have two of them in our neighbourhood, a mother and a daughter. They are not very colorful or exciting, but they are as even as a road that you always know where it leads. Their manner to you is the same and always pleasant. You need not look forward to a mood or an unusual companionableness nor head one of withdrawal and silence. I enjoy these women just as much as I do. The neighbourhood needs them and the world needs them and the millions like them who keep things stable and poised.

One Day She May Have Nothing, Another Day Much.
 And yet I think we need the other too. After I have been thrown suddenly with the first variety of person, I turn with relief to the person whom I do not know just where and who may not have anything to say one day but who will perhaps give me more of stimulus and excitement and congeniality the next than the other woman would give me in a week of steady companionableness.

And then again, I find myself tired and strained by the over tension of the type of person and I turn back with a sigh of relief to the sort who is always the same.

THE AFTERNOON NAP.

Some women believe that in order to properly secure a little nap during the warm afternoon, it is necessary to disrobe entirely and open up the bed which has been neatly made for the day.

This takes time and disturbs the neatness of the bedroom, so that when the sleeper gets up, much work has to be done to make it appear as it should. Other women lay themselves down just as they are in more or less stiff corsets, uncomfortable clothes and with the hair dressed neatly and firmly, which hair dressing does not make the most comfortable pillow in the world.

In hot weather, this latter way of taking a nap is apt to leave the sleeper wet with perspiration, weak and nervous. I would recommend a compromise between the two methods, avoiding the undesirable features of both.

If one has not sufficient time to disrobe it is better to lie back in a large easy chair and relax every muscle. Have the room darkened and let it be understood you are entitled to fifteen minutes rest without interruption.

Even this short time will fresh you, if all care and worry are banished for the time. If the house is very warm and with the hair-dresser, kiss much flushed and over-heated, I counsel her to remove all her clothing and with a towel wring from tepid water, give the body a gentle rubbing, drying well afterwards with a rough towel or two.

A little talcum powder is pleasant, used after such a sponge bath. Alcohol put into the water from which the towel is wrung also adds to its coolness. If one does not object to its characteristic odor. Then the negligence and the siesta will be found pleasant and comforting.

GETTING ON TO SPRING.

It's getting on to spring again. The robins soon will sing again. The tulips and the daffodils. Will bud and come to bloom. The skies will soon be blue again. The meadows look like new again. And beautiful and lovely things. Will smile where now is gloom.

Men do not doubt that spring again will bring the birds to sing again. Men do not view the leafless trees of winter in dismay. Nor sigh when comes the frost to them.

Then every rose is lost to them: They know that every sleeping plant Shall hear the call of May.

Men know the gentle sun, again, Shall bid the brooks to run again; They know the hollyhocks once more Shall blossom by the gate; The blue shall find the skies again, The lily dead shall rise again, And all the orchards come to bloom If they will only wait.

Yet when to them come snow again And bitter grief and woe again, They bow their heads and wail aloud That life's a hopeless thing, Forgetting they shall rise again 'Neath blue and happy skies again, And come from death at God's command To all the joys of spring.

Odd Superstitions.

It has been wisely remarked that an ancient and universal belief is not to be lightly ignored; there must be "something in it."

Odd numbers have always and everywhere been held in peculiar reverence, and if that is mere superstition, then it only proves that, despite our civilization, we are still superstitious.

A hen is always given an odd number of eggs to be hatched. Why? There is no reason at all, except superstition.

Salutes from warships, forts, etc., are always given in odd numbers, yet no valid reason can be adduced. It is a remnant of the old "odd numbers are lucky" superstition.

Virgil records all sorts of charms and spells practised round odd numbers—never even ones. And we still after two failures, make another attempt, and murmur hopefully: "Third time lucky!" The odd number again: and the old superstition!

Seven is the favorite Biblical number, and old divines taught that it held a mystical perfection. It's an odd number. Three is the number of the Trinity—an odd number again.

Falstaff, in the "Merry Wives," is entrapped for the third time. He himself said: "They say there is a divinity in odd numbers" because of the old belief that the odd time would be lucky.

Physicians of other days always insisted that "bleedings" should be in odd numbers—one, three, five, etc., and never an even one.

The number two was avoided and had an evil reputation, because on the second day hell was created.

Order of Cootie.

Coblentz, March 2.—The "Order of the Cootie" was recently organized among American forces on the Rhine. Beneath the crest showing a "cootie" rampant, are the words "Coot Mite Uns."

Only veterans of three months' scratching experience are eligible.

LONESOME.

I'm l o n e s o m e when the winter ends; the winter takes away my friends, by twos and threes and scores; they live through summer, spring and fall, but winter comes, with blizzards and storms, and stops the cheerful choruses. Mechanics this winter was the worst that ever happened, last and first, it filled so many graves; a hundred friends have gone to sleep in couches narrow, cold and deep, out where the brown grass waves. A hundred dear old friends are gone; no more they'll gossip on the lawn, or in the Blue Front store; I'm lonesome—for old friends I yearn, I look for them at every turn, but see my friends no more. An old gent cannot make new friends, as down the sunset slope he wanders, with halting steps and slow; the more the bells of evening ring, the more his soul's affections cling to friends of long ago. The winter bore my friends away; I lost a comrade every day, and some days two or three; I wonder why death's angel comes, to steal my friend, with muffled drums, and why he sidesteps me?

Nature's Food Hogs.

The war on the wood pigeon has opened the eyes of a good many people to the fact that there are food hogs in Nature as among human nature. The voracious wild pigeon eats nearly its own weight in food every day and as a serious menace to farm crops. Any good it may do in destroying noxious insects and weeds is in a sort of proportion to the harm it will do.

Considering the food problem, Londoners may well be startled at the fact that the number of mice in the City has increased by 25 per cent, since the outbreak of war. Mice work untold harm in the granaries and warehouses where food is stored. They need to be kept down, for they are prolific breeders. In one year a pair of mice may be responsible for a thousand descendants. Every man should be his own Pied Piper to-day.

Gluttonous Sparrows. Then take Mr. Reynard. He puts the stopper on any great development of poultry farming in all the Southern shires. Sussex, for instance, is particularly well adapted to poultry farming, but the existence of Reynard in large numbers forbids big ventures. We rid our country of the wolf, and the badger is growing extinct, yet we allow the fox to flourish for the sake of sport, then cry out that eggs in war time are prohibitive in price.

Many birds, as everybody knows, are our best friends, because they eat up the insect life that would otherwise make it impossible for men to exist on the face of the globe. But why should sparrows be allowed to become so numerous? They are able to work untold mischief in our orchards and are great thieves among the corn. Does anyone know of any good done by sparrows? Yet we deliberately encourage these quarrelsome birds out of sentiment.

Your Feet Will Never Behave.

And you really can't expect them to, when you listen to Columbia's Dance Records—one-steps, two-steps, waltzes and fox-trots.
