"strategy" is Alexnader P. Watson, of Knoxville, Tenn., who has just returned from France. The "kamerad" gun, which he brought home as a scuvenir, is so small that it can be The short muzzle is entirely hidden by the fingers. The weapon is also fitted with a stock so built that it fits into the curve of the hand as it is held above one's head, and the long trigger is worked with the little Parthenon.

In "surrendering" the wielder of fashion, but the right, holding the gun is extended above the head with the palm turned in, concealing the pistol. When the victim is close' enough, a twist of the wrist is enough to do the work.

There was no resistance on the part of the German when Watson finally got this souvenir. A doughboy in a "mopping-up" party at work nearby saw the attack on the "Y" man. The roldier's action, which was instantaneous, made it unnecessary for the stretcher tearers to pick up this particular "wounded" man.
