NORAH CUSHALEEN OR THE HAUNTED CASTLE.

'You have a captain, of course?'
'Of course we have, Captain Jack. Everybody has heard of him.'
'I haven't,' returned Hargreave.—
'But this is not wonderful, for I have been only a few weeks in Ireland. Well now, give my compliments to Captain Jack, and say I wish to see him immediately.'
'Yes, but you're a hurry boy now. If he looks in upon you in the morning after breakfast, that will be the sooner. And sure the best thing you can do now is to take a sleep, and it's just that same I intend doing, so the top of the early morning to you, Mister Painter.'
So saying, the robber retired, his companion accompanying him. When they had swept through the circular gateway a harsh creaking noise caused the youth to look towards it, when he saw that a strong iron grating had been drawn across.
'That effectually imprisons me,' he thought. 'No chance of escape. If I fail to make this Capt. Jack listen to reason, my case is desperate.'
He ate a few mouthfuls of the food that had been brought, and being exhausted by the toilsome night journey, went and threw himself upon the couch of moss. It was deliciously soft, and despite the perilous nature of his position, he soon fell into a deep sleep.
He was awakened by the harsh noise of the grating and the entrance of the same robber who had attended him the night before. He carried with him a bowl of steaming hot coffee, and intimated that it was for his breakfast.
'Can I see the Captain, now?' asked Hargreave, as his jailer was about to retire.
'Don't know, if he comes, he comes; if he doesn't, he doesn't.'
'Oh, I could have told you that myself,' observed the youth.
'Then don't be after asking me questions I can't answer,' said the man as he vanished, leaving the grating undrawn. The youth had taken all the breakfast he had an appetite for, and was debating with himself as to the propriety of proceeding through the opening into the larger cavern without, when a quick step was heard in the passage, and a tall, well-made man, richly dressed, and armed with pistols, entered the chamber.
Hargreave rose, and calmly confronted the dark piercing eye which was bent on him.
'I am told you want to see me,' said the stranger, after a moment's scrutiny.
'If you are Captain Jack, I certainly do,' replied Hargreave.
'I am Captain Jack,' was the laconic response.
'Then, sir,' added Hargreave, firmly, 'you must be aware that it is the most natural thing possible for me to wish to see you. I have been captured by three of your gang, and brought here to your stronghold; now I wish to know what you mean to do with me?'
'Keep you here till the object of your capture is effected,' answered the Captain with blunt frankness.
'That is, till Mary Kendal is married to Maltrin,' said the youth.
'Exactly.'
'Then my captivity is likely to be a long one,' returned the youth. 'Mary Kendal is not the girl, who will forswear her pledged troth.'
'Bah! if your trust is in a woman's constancy,' said the Captain, 'with a better reason, you can't lean upon a weaker reed.'
'I cling to better faith than that,' said Hargreave.
'Faith,' repeated the captain, 'is the same thing as love, and I have faith in your constancy.'
'And is it from that you now speak?' asked the youth.
'It is,' was the fierce rejoinder. 'I trusted once, I had faith once, but I was deceived once, and so will you.'
'Never,' returned Hargreave. 'I will stake my life on Mary's faithfulness.'
'Poor fool,' muttered the captain. 'I was once like you—the time will come when you will be like me.'
'I believe, Captain, your prisoners can be ransomed,' said Hargreave, not caring to continue a train of conversation which seemed to stir up a deep poison in the other's breast.
'Generally,' returned the captain, speaking again in a cool tone.
'Suppose we come to terms then?'
'You are not a subject of ransom,' said the captain, drily.
'Perhaps you think I cannot command the means,' remarked the youth; but that is a mistake. Name the sum, and—'
'I have told you that you are not a subject of ransom,' repeated the captain quickly and decisively. 'No sum you could offer will avail, for I have contracted with Blantire, and Captain Jack never breaks his word.'
'Not even if it is given for a dishonourable purpose.'
'Dishonourable,' repeated the captain scornfully. 'What have I to do with honour? Am I not here at open war with all mankind? I am the enemy of every one, and observe no terms but such as I myself impose. Dishonourable! ha, ha, how the world tickles my ear! But, hark, it was the world that taught me to be what I am. It showed me what a breath of air honour is, and all the empty names of love, devotion, and constancy. I am but meeting out that which was measured to me. You, too, will become wiser some day.'
'I will never yield up my faith in God, or man or woman,' returned Hargreave.
'No, you'll not yield it up; it will be wrenched from you,' said the other, with savage bitterness.

Business Education!
A practical business education has now become a necessity to every young man contemplating a business career. Without this education young men are destitute of the first requisite to success.

The business education the British American Commercial College of Toronto imparts, and it is a source of pride to the proprietors that their graduates are at the present time filling positions of honor and responsibility in the mercantile world of this country. The Banking Institutions of our country, stronger testimony to the thoroughness of this education could be given than the following letter from J. G. Wright, Esq., President of the Board of Trade:

Toronto, Dec. 19, 1866.

Messrs. Musgrove & Wright, 150 St. James Street—1 cannot express too strongly my appreciation of your efforts to establish a model home of business education. I consider that such a system as yours is of the greatest importance both to the employer and the employee, as it saves the former the time and labor of teaching every new hand, and the latter the waste of time involved in a long apprenticeship. Your admirable system of real business is a complete remedy for this defect, and your great success in this department is made clearly manifest by the air of reality that your students display in their mode of transacting business. I can testify to the excellence of your system from personal experience, having at the present time in the employ of the firm I belong to three young men who were educated at your establishment. Wishing you every success in your laudable enterprise,

I remain, dear Sir, yours, &c.

J. G. WRIGHT.

The first prize for Business Penmanship was awarded this Commercial College at the late Provincial Exhibition in Toronto. Graduates are examined and their diplomas signed by a Board of Examiners composed of practical business men. Graduates are also admitted to studentship, if required.

A circular is sent to all students, giving a detailed account of system, regulations, terms, &c., and may be had by enclosing stamp and addressing Canada Depot, 23 Hospital Street, Montreal.

THE India and China Tea Company beg to call the attention of the Canadian community to their direct imported Teas, which for purity and excellence will be found unequalled.

The Company have made arrangements whereby they have secured the finest and most valuable of the best plantations in Assam and on the slopes of the Himalayas, and by their judicious blending of the various Teas with the best varieties of China produce, are enabled to offer to the public Tea of quality and flavor hitherto unknown in the general consumption of Teas.
