The shipment of apples from this port were expected to be heavy this week, being estimated at about 20,000 bbls; but it has just been learned that a considerable quantity will have to be left over, steamers not being able to take all that was booked owing to low water. It is herefore doubtful if more than 12,000 or 13,000 bbls will go forward this week. Cable advices yesterday quoted Liverpool and London firm at good prices; but the London market was bad. Advices from the West report sales about 3,000 bbls of winter varieties at $2 to $2 15, the latter for red stock. In this market an improved demand has been experienc-ed owing to Bonsecours dealers being in the market, and sales are reported at $2 to $2 50, a few fancy sorts bringing $2 75.—Montreal Trade Bulletin. THE ADVANCE OF BUTTER IN ENGLAND. The late advance in the price of but-ter in England has been most phenomenal, which has not been experienced before within the last 40 years. According to last mail advices from England, the wholesale price of butter had long ago sold at 85s in Liverpool, has since brought 116s to 117s 6d, or a rise of 31s to 32s 6d. It is said, however, that the fine edge of the advance in England has since been blunted.

CANADIAN BACON IN ENGLAND No greater tribute could be paid to the excellence of Canadian bacon, and the high esteem in which it is held in the English market, than the following, which we take from a London, England paper:

"Pea-fed Canadian bacon is all cleared, with hardly a lot left, and the value has not receded the same as that for native and Scandinavian bacon; but English cured has lessened in value by 2 to 3 shillings per cwt." The fact that such a ready sale is experienced for Canadian bacon, that the market is generally kept pretty clear of stocks, speaks volumes for the growing popularity of this article in England, despite the glut of Irish, Danish, Scandinavian and English brands that are offered in competition BUTTER EXPORTS.

During the five years of the Mackenzie Administration the value of outter exported from Canada amounted to $12.954,160, an average og $3,590,832 annually. In the last five years the trade amounted to but $4,391,365, an average of $878,073; for the preceding years the showing was barely $800,000 a year.

The gray November days have come: but there's nothing gray about the stores. The brightness reigns, and will continue to reign till after the holidays. The stocks of dress goods, carpets, upholstery, etc., are bright with the cherry tints that winter warms to, and although the skies be lowering, electric lights bring out the shades and contrasts finely. Then half the brightness is in the moving throngs. And advertising is the power that

BARGAIN. A traveler was sitting with some naval officers in front of a hotel in Java, and was approached by a forlorn looking Chinaman, who had a sword cane in his hand. "Want buy?" said he, bowing profoundly to the group. The others paid no attention to him, but I (says the trareler), being somewhat inexperienced, took pity on him and asked his price.

"Six dollars!" I exclaimed. "That is too much.' "Velly fine sword-cane. Chinaman velly hungly," whined he, plaintively. "Help hungly man. Five dollah, sah." "No," much." said I, "five dollars is too "Four dollah; little, little four dol-

The lieutenant then took me to a neighboring shop, where there was a shelf full of sword-canes, just like mine, marked 25 cents each!

Trolley Mishaps.

Two Caradoc Ladies Have a Narrow Escape.

Difficulty Over Railroad Crossing Privileges-Buggy Wheels Taken Off.

Mrs. Henry Brown and Mrs. Cephas Sisson, of con. 6. Caradoc township, near the Lobo town line, drove into the city today via York street. They tried to pass a wagon and drove on the track. A trolley came along and took a rear wheel off their buggy. Luckily the ladies were thrown away from the track, or they might have been run over and killed. The accident was nobody's fault, the wagon ob-which to travel home. Two ladles were driving across the tracks on the Wharncliffe road near the bridge yesterday afternoon, when their horse suddenly stopped to wait for a trolley. Before the motorman could pull up the car took off a buggy wheel, but the occupants escaped un-

Some Caracteristic Street Scenes in Mexico's Capital Bity. The population of the City of Mexico is about 300,000, and of these at least two-thirds live literally in the streets. The high altitude, the mildness and dryness of the atmosphere, even in the depth of winter, and the almost constantly clear blue sky, combine to make out-of-door life as attractive as may be found, perhaps, anywhere in world. There is an exhibarating lightness and uplifting buoyancy in the air that gives people a dislike for con-finement in the close, heavy houses of Multitudes of persons of wealth eat, sleep, work, visit and idle away their time through the whole year in their gardens or on the very broad porches that extend all about the universal pation of their low, rambling houses. Thousands of the poorer classes never have any homes but cheap tent and hut-like adobes, and for years have slept wherever drowsiness may overtake them-whether in the open doorways, on the cathedral steps, in the market places, or in the fields about the city. The people of the City of Mexico are, therefore, noted for habits of early rising. At so early an hour as 7 o'clock almost any morning, especially after the long, hot, summer season is over, elegant equipages may be seen dashing through the park, not a few of the liveried drivers holding ribbons over sleek buckskin mules—for here the mule is not relegated to the plebs, but holds his own with equine aristocracy, And certainly his satiny skin, his dainty ebonized hoofs and neatly shorn tail. ending in a jaunty tassel, and his aggressive ears, subdued with fancy nets (assuming a look of conservative meekness), merit the distinction, and show how one may feed a mule, as well as feed a man, into a higher state of

While the latest Parisian styles prevail among the Mexican ladies, the black lace mantilla still anticipates millinery confections. Conscious, no doubt, of the charm that lies in the black lace mantilla so bewitchingly dis-posed over her inky braids, softening the outline of the face and lending a pensive dignity to the carriage, the sonorita clings to it. A Spanish woman in a new-fangled hat or bonnet loses half her interest, and she is wise enough to know it.—City of Mexico Correspondent.
