"Nothing that is likely to help us," asserted the coroner. "No vestiges of poison, no letters, not even a scrap of writing of any kind."
Mr. Gryce did not commit himself.

"I would like to take an inventory of the articles," said he. The coroner allowed him to do so, and then inquired,

"What about witnesses? Have you seen the clerks at the drug store?" "Yes, they have nothing to add to his story. He stopped there, came in as he said, told his fears and asked for assistance. One of them, Herbert Black by name, at once responded; but before he could reach the door, the doctor came rushing back, and crying out, "It is too late, she is dead," led the way to the phaeton, where they saw the poor girl tumbled in a heap, white and lifeless. They were young men and did not know enough to take her by the hand and see if she were yet cold. They took the doctor's words for granted, knowing him so well, and feeling a natural indisposition to interfere in a matter at once so horrible and so delicate, only asked what they could do to help him. 'I am going to take her straight home,' he told them, and requested one of them to telephone to you and the other to run along at his side as far as the house. This latter duty fell to Mr. Black, and it was he who helped the doctor carry the poor girl in. That is all. I worked a half hour, but could get no more out of him. "And the clergyman"

"Has nothing to impart." "And the driver? You surely have seen the driver, he whom he sent out of the way with a prescription to some patient or other?"

Mr. Gryce's brows knit. "I have had but nine hours to work in," said he, "and one of them was thrown away on that boy. I set a watch for him in three places and succeeded in getting the first word with him. But had only one story to tell, and he old it doggedly. It was in strict accordance with that of Dr. Molesworth. He had been ordered to come to the C— Hotel at a quarter past eight to take Mr. Pease home after the expected ceremony. He had gone there on foot, Dr. Molesworth himself having driven Mr. Pease to the hotel, and finding the eton at the door, had waited beside it for the clergyman to come out. But before this could happen the doctor reappeared, and declaring that matters had not gone as he had wished, took his place in the phaeton and beckoned him in beside him; after which they rode about the streets till the doctor suddenly stopped the horse somewhere near Union Square, and commanding him to get out gave him a bit of paper which he told him to take as quick as he could to Mr. Menroe in Seventy-third street. He obeyed him and had only just come back. This is what the boy said, and all he would say. But I know as well as I know anything that he did not tell the truth; for when I asked him what cars he took, he stared at me helplessly and then said. 'The Madison avenue cars,' which story he stuck to, but as one who is very much frightened sticks to a statement he knows is false but dares

"I will make him tell the truth," asserted the coroner. "It is to be hoped so. He is not dull, but he is mighty obstinate and is to all appearance very much afraid of his

Mr. Gryce looked doubtful, but did not pursue the subject. On the contrary he remarked:

"I forgot to give you another point I have made. Molesworth says that after leaving the hotel he rode through the streets searching for his missing bride. Now, a person who searches goes slowly, and when he finds what he seeks in the condition in which Miss Farley was found, he still goes slowly. But Dr. Molesworth's horse was driven far and fast, as the state he was in when I drove him into the stable amply showed." "A point? I should think so!" "And that is not all. Seeing that the horse went a trifle lame, I examined his feet, and there, wedged between the hoof and the shoe of his right fore-foot, I found a bit of gravel which I dare wager never came from the streets about Madison Square. As the horse was not lame enough for it to have been there long, I drew the inference that Miss Farley was searched for in other regions than those his story would lead you to surmise."

"Very likely."
"Dr. B—." Mr. Gryce now remarked, "I want time." "Good!" was the reply, "and how Well, that I cannot tell. Maybe hours will answer and maybe I shall want days. There is all her past history to learn, and where she was on that short vacation to which the landlady alludes. If you want to get at the truth postpone your inquest a little. I won't

'et the matter drag.' "I see; Gryce is awake, and all because of a look."

"Less things than that have sent a man to the gallows before now. Intricate locks have small keys. "And you hope to open this one?"

Mr. Gryce's cuff button flashed. It had received a glance which recalled the days when Mr. Gryce's glance meant

CHAPTER VIII.

Mrs. Olney's indignation against the detective Harrison did not last long. Once relieved from the constraint of his superior's presence, he showed himself so respectful and considerate that her prejudices were soon vanquished and he had more than one opportunity to approach that quarter of the room over which she had promised to hold such a jealous watch. It was at one of these times-while he was waiting for Mrs. Olney to drink the glass of water he had brought her, I believe—that he discovered the fact in regard to Miss Farley's garments, of which Mr. Gryce made mention in his interview with the coroner; and had it not been for Dr. Molesworth's watchful eye and open ear he might have gleaned other information still more useful; for Mrs. Olney had nothing to conceal and much to impart, and Mrs. Olney dearly liked an appreciative listener. But as it was, he had no sooner beguiled her into conversation, than some movement of the doctor attracted the good woman's attention, and stopped the flow of speech into which she had been betrayed. And once when he thought he was really on the point of learning some important fact, that same grave and determined individual boldly interfered with the remark that Mrs. Olney had better not tire herself as she would need all her strength to answer the coroner's questions on the morrow.

It was therefore with something like relief that in the early morning he heard the bell ring and saw the coroner enter followed by a woman, whose kind, motherly face did not deceive him as to the part she was to play in this drama. The long struggle with the severe, gloomy-browed doctor, who had the faculty of making his presence felt in a heavy, oppressive kind of way even when he did not speak or appear to hear, was over, at least, and he would now have the opportunity to gather such fragments of information as he knew would be acceptable to Mr. Gryce. But for some reason or other it was destined that he should not shine in this affair. Though he had a merry time down stairs and went in his search for knowledge as high as the room in which the unhappy girl had loaged, he gleaned but little of interest; so that when Mr. Gryce came, he had really nothing to report beyond the slight fact of which I have already made mention. When therefore the elder detective announced to the coroner that he had all the girl's past history to learn, he was stating nothing but the simple fact, and it was to this task he addressed himself as soon after leaving that official as circumstances would

His first attempt succeeded as well as could be expected, Mrs. Olney receiving him in his real character with as good a grace, and telling him all she knew in as candid a spirit as if he had not so basely played upon her credulity the evening before.

Did You Ever Think

That you cannot be well unless you have pure, rich blood? If you are weak, tired, Inguid and all run down, it is because your blood is impoverished and lacks vitality. These troubles may be overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla because Hood's Sarsaparilla makes pure, rich blood. It is, in truth, the great blood purifier.

A neighbor advised me to try Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, stating that his wife had used it for a throat trouble with the best results. Acting on this advice, I procured the medicine, and less than a half-bottle cured me; I certainly be-lieve it saved my life. It was with reluctance that I consented to a trial, as was reduced to such a state that I doubted the power of any remedy to do me any good."

FLORENCE.

Florence, July 2.—The large gathering which assembled on the rectory grounds Florence, at the open air concert and lawn social, given on Friday last, under the auspices of the Guild of St. Matthew's Church, enjoyed a most delightsome evening. The grounds were tastily decorated and illuminated, and after refreshments were served a neat programme was presented which was highly appreciated by all. Mr. Harry Poole, of London, the soloist of the evening, was in splendid voice, the several selections rendered by him being highly appreciated and enthusiastically applauded. The selections given by St. Matthew's Quartet, the duet by the Misses Rheintgen, of Bothwell; and the solo by Miss May Atkinson, of Florence, were also well received. Misses Young and Unsworth were he accompanists for the evening. The music furnished by the Bothwell Brass Band was also much appreciated. Rev. H. R. Diehl occupied the chair. Although the admission was only 15 cents for adults, and 10 cents for children the expenses aggregated about $30 the net proceeds amounted to some $45.
