The Ship that Never Comes There's a ship, so says tradition, Sailing home to every heart; But the winds of adverse fortune But the winds of adverse fortune
Strive to keep the two apart.
Little faces at the windows
Of our country's brightest homes
Fell a tale of fond hearts waiting
For the ship that never comes.

I have waited in the gloaming,
After watching all the day,
For the vessel that is tardy—
'14 will-come,' my heart would say;
'Maybe it has lost a rudder
Somewhere on the fickle sea;
They will build for it another,
Then my ship will come to-day.'

And I wait on in silence;

Rose and set night's fairest star;
But the pennon of my vessel,

Treasure-laden, kept afar.

Then I cried: 'This ceaseless watch SPECTACLES & PLATED WARE Darkens many a joyful home; For the heart's sunshine is absent With the bark that does not con I've a neighbor who is waiting
