Music in the Home

"A certain class of our public has always been interested in music, and those who make music their business have catered to that class. But little or no effort has been made to awaken the great mass of the people to the fact that music is part and parcel of their daily life. And who is there that is better qualified—whose interest is more affected in bringing about a recognition of the true value of this great art, than those men who make up the piano and music industry of our country?"—Ben. H. Janssen before the annual convention of the National Piano Manufacturers' Association.
