An Incentous Mechanic.—Somewhere about the year 1780, ha travelling miliwright, footsore, and with the broadest northern Doric accent, stopped at Soho, a locality once indicative of field sports, but then the engine factory of Boulton and Watt, and asked for work. His aspect was little better than one of 'beggary's and poor looks,' and Mr. Boulton had bidden him God speed to some other workshop, when, as he was turning away sorrowfully, Mr. Boulton suddenly called him back.

'What kind of hat's yon ye havelon your head, my man?

'It's just timmer, sir.'

'Timber, my man; let's look at it.—Where did yon get it?'

'I just made it, sir, my ainsel'.'

'How did you make it?'

'I just turned it in the lathie.'

'But it's oval, man! and a lathe turns things round!'

WOMAN'S DEVOTEDNESS TO MAN.—She is happy in owing everything to man. That alone imparts a singular charm to the poor household. There nothing is foreign or indifferent; everything bears the stamp of a beloved hand, the seal of the heart. Man very often little knows the privations she endures in order that, on his return, he may find his dwelling modest, yet adorned. Great is the ambition of woman for the household clothes, and linen. This last article is new the linen closet, the pride of the country-woman, was unknown to the wife of the town workman before the revolution in industry which I have mentioned. Cleanliness, puworkman before the revolution in industry which I have mentioned. Cleanliness, purity, modesty, those graces of woman. then enchanted the house: the bed was surrounded with curtains; the child's cradle, dazzled with whiteness, became a paradise: the whole cut out, and sewed it a few evenings. Add moreover, a flower to the window! What a surprise! the husband, on his return, no longer knows his own home! This taste for flowers, which has spread, and this little expenditure to ornament the interior, are they not lamentable, when these people never know whether they have any work on the morrow? Call it not expenditure, say rather economy. It is a very great one, if the innocent attraction of the wife renders the house charming to the house and the wife? A few cills of printed cotton makes her another woman: see she is regenerated, and become young again.

NEWSPAPERS.—The newspaper is the chronicle of civilisation—the common reservoir into which every stream pours its living waters, and at which every man may come to drink. It is the newspaper that gives to liberty its practical life, its constant observation, its perpetual vigilance, its unrelaxing activity. The newspaper informs legislation of public opiaion, and it informs the people of the acts of legislation. And this is not all. The newspaper teems with the most practical morality—in its reports of crime and punishment you find a daily warning against temptaion: not a case in a police court, not a single trial of a wretched outcast, or a trembling felon, that does not preach to us the awful lesson, how imprudence leads to error, how error leads to guilt, how guilt reaps its bitter fruit of auguish and degredation. The newspaper is the familiar bond that binds us together man and man—no matter what may be the distance of clime or the difference of race. There it is that we have learned how to sympathise with the slave, how to battle for his rights, how to wrest the scourge from his taskmaster. Over land and sea the voice of outraged humanity has reached the great heart of England, and raised up a host of freemen as the liberators of the enslaved and tortured negro! The newspaper is a law-book for the molent, a sermon for the thoughtless, a library for the -The newspaper is the newspaper is a law-book for the indolent, a sermon for the thoughtless, a library for the poor. It may stimulate the most indifferent, poor. It may stimulate the most in it may instruct the most profound.
