

As I stated at the outset of my remarks, the task is extremely complex since, as I have tried to point out, the problem is made up of a series of interrelated factors, some weighing more heavily on some parts of the globe, others affecting a different group of countries. The consideration here of all these problems - assistance, surpluses and dumping, trade and trade barriers - at one time, serve to underline their complexity and, as Mr. Philippe de Seynes reminded us, their interrelation. It also serves to keep in proper balance the suggested ways of dealing with individual aspects of the problem. We would hope that continued use is made of this forum for general discussion, so that the more specialized United Nations bodies will receive guidance in their particular work, and be enabled to carry out their functions more effectively. . . .
