

requires treatment of the most radical kind. They also know that the commercial value of every animal having fully developed Lump-Jaw is practically nil, to say nothing of the constant danger of infection of healthy animals wherever the diseased one is found in the herd.

The information here given is, therefore, of vital importance to farmers and stock-raisers. A high authority can be quoted for every statement made, the facts having been gathered from the latest Government and State reports and from the experiments of scientific men who have for years made a study of the disease,
