Why, replied the witness, Goodwin ask Williams if he ought not to move to set as nonsuit. W. Williams said, certainly he as he had good grounds for so doing; and that "the judge was a d—d old fool, would have let the case go to the jury."

Lord Chief Justice Best joined most heartily in the roar of laughter which this reply drew from the whole auditory, except Mr. Williams, who, being seated immediately facing the learned Judge, seemed quite overwhelmed with consternation at being thus suddenly brought, as it were, to pay his compliments, vis-a-vis, to his Lordship: and, fearing he should be considered less courteous than candid in the expression of his opinion, he most energetically disclaimed the language imputed to him.

The Lord Chief Justice.—These things will happen, Mr. Williams.

Mr. Williams, with increased vehemence, declined having used any such expressions: and seemed to grow very warm on the occasion.

The Lord Chief Justice.—Mr. Williams, learn temper of me. His Lordship then related an anecdote of Lord Kenyon, to whom, after trying an action one day, one of the parties came back to make a complaint of the other, who had been de-fected. "What is it?" said his Lordship.—
"Why," replied the party, "he said your Lordship was a rogue, and the Jury were fools."— "Well," said Lord Kenyon, "I forgive him, and I hope so do the Jury."

Theodore Hook, in his younger days, paid his addresses to a beautiful heiress, now the mother of a large family: and having boasted to one of his cronies that he would marry her and return to town in a week with his bride he took a post chaise and went down to the scene of his victory, accompanied by another friend who was to be the witness of his triumph. The first friend to whom he communicated his project was the favourite adir-er of the lady, and was actually, by appointment from her family, going down to marry her. On the road, without knowing the circumstance, both parties put up at the same inn, and slept in adjacent rooms. During the night, the lady's present husband, the successful rival, heard Theodore getting out of bed, dancing, singing, and making epigrams to his companion on the ease with which women are won, intimating his intention of entering and quitting the imaginary scene of his triumph with horns blowing, colours flying, &c. On his arrival, the wag found the scene changed: the stage preoccupied by a superior staid, and received a gentle hint from a maternal prompter, that his exit, as early as convenient, would be agreeable. No horns were blown on Theodore's return to town.

From recent English dates, and from private letters, we are happy to learn, that throughout the Kingdom a general Commercial improvement has commenced; the spirit of public confidence has again revived; the prospects of the Manufacturer and the Merchant, have begun to brighten; and by their cheering influence, have conduced to the amelioration of the condition of the operative part of the community.

On Saturday afternoon last this City and Neighbourhood were visited by a violent Storm of Thunder and Lightning, accompanied by torrents of Rain, which continued to fall without intermission until late in the evening.

Great apprehension is entertained of the safety of the Pilot Boat Juxo, of this port, which left the harbour on Saturday last before the storm commenced; as neither Crew nor Vessel have since been heard of.—Since the above was in type, we are glad to hear that Messrs. ANTHONY and MILLS, who where in her, have arrived here safe, but the Boat is entirely lost.

On the 30th April, a Carver's Inquest was held on view of the body of William Haddon. Verdict.—Died in consequence of falling from the North Market Wharf.

Memoranda.

Portsmouth, March 16.—His Majesty's ship Blonde, which arrived yesterday, fell in with on the 7th inst. in lat. 44 deg. 43 min. north, long. 21 deg. 57 min. west, the Frances Mary, of 395 tons, Kendall, Master, of and from New Brunswick, bound to Liverpool, timber laden, (being her first voyage.) water-logged and a perfect wreck.
Took off the master, his wife, three seamen, and one female passenger, out of a crew of seventeen. On the 1st Feb. the Frances Mary experienced a most tremendous gale of wind from the W. S. W. during which she carried away her foremast; the sea made a complete breach over her, washed four seamen off the deck, the boats, &c.; for twenty two days, in this horrible condition, the unfortunate survivors supported their miserable existence by actually feeding on the dead bodies of those who died on the wreck, when they were providentially fallen in with and rescued from their horrid state by His Majesty's ship Blonde. From her commander, Lord Byron, and his officers, they received the utmost possible sympathy, and every thing was as afforded for their comfort and accommodation by his Lordship, whose conduct towards them the captain says no language on his part is sufficient to express; for had they remained a few hours longer, they must inevitably have perished, having been brought on board in a complete state of exhaustion.
