WALTER JOHNSON IDOL OF FANDOM, AGAIN DEFEATED

Goslin and Bentley Hit
Home Runs—Former Equals Record.

The ambition of a lifetime wrecked, the cherished hopes of 19 years of patient waiting, blasted, Walter Johnson stands forth today as one of the most tragic figures a world's series has ever produced. What Johnson's thoughts were yesterday at the Polo Grounds as the Giant bats played havoc with his best offerings, can only be imagined. No doubt he wished that he could turn back "Father Time" about ten years just for a few short hours to the palmy days when batters used to remark: "How can we hit what we cannot see?" Alas, those days have gone forever. Against the ruthless attack of the Giants, led by the 18-year-old rookie at third, with four hits, Johnson struggled desperately, but Bentley's homer in the fifth sent New York into the lead and a heavy bombardment in the eighth, which would have meant a hasty trip to the showers for any pitcher but Johnson, spelt the end of the great twirler's last fading hopes. The final score ended 6 to 2.

The Giants broke into the run column in the third session when two scratch hits and a solid drive gave them one run. A double-play saved Johnson in this inning, although it was the weakened infield behind him that was chiefly responsible for him getting into a hole as they should have cut down at least one of the two scratch hits.

Washington tied the count in fourth with two hits and a sacrifice, but the deadlock only lasted one inning, and then Gowdy's single and Bentley's terrific drive into the right field stands sent New York far into the lead.

There was no further scoring until the eighth. Rice was called out at first on a very close play just before Goslin crashed a ball into the same stands for a circuit drive. This hit seemed to arouse a fear in the Giants that the Senators might rally again in the ninth so they launched a drive which swept the Senators of their feet and drove three runs across the plate on three singles, a sacrifice fly and an error by Johnson. This placed the game far beyond the Senators' reach.

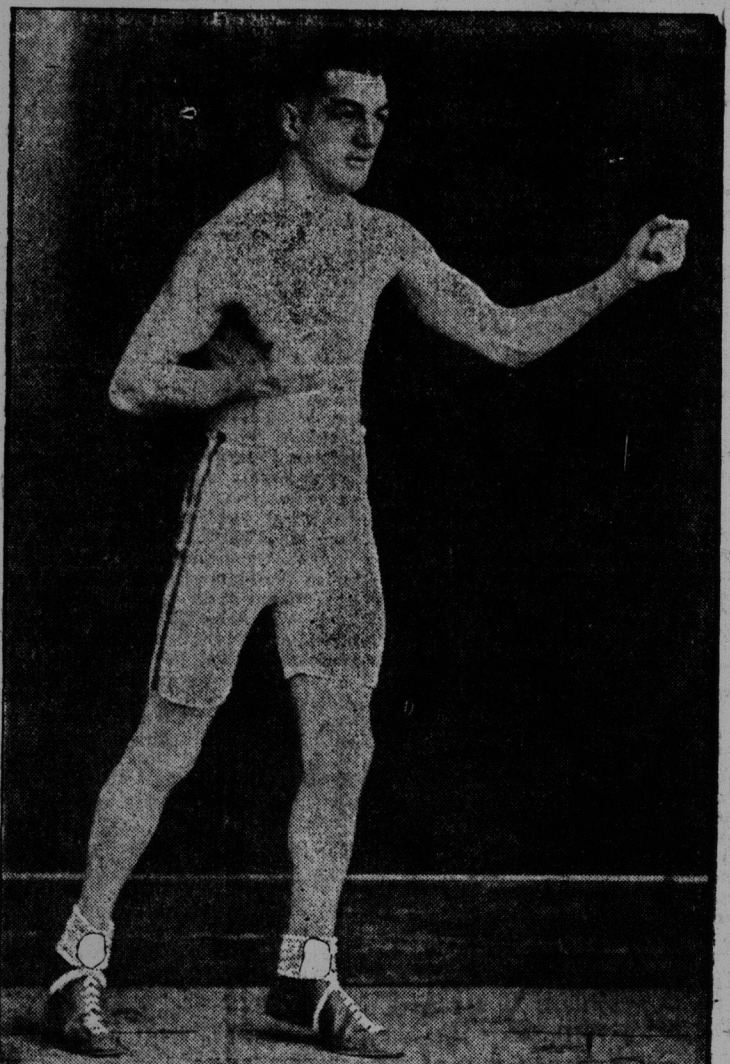

Bentley was on the firing line for the Giants and he hurled a strong game, keeping the Senators' hits scattered and showing exceptional strength in the pinches until the eighth. Goslin's homer was followed by Judge's single and Manager McGraw decided that McQuillen was needed in this emergency. McQuillen celebrated his arrival by retiring the Senators on three pitched balls, both batters grounding to the infield.

Manager Harris kept Walter Johnson on the mound in spite of the terrific hammering he was receiving, apparently being willing to accept defeat rather than add further misery to the trip which already seemed filled with withdrawing the veteran from the box in what will probably be the last world's series game he will ever pitch. Johnson, after the contest, declared that he may retire from the game next season.

Another crowd of approximately 50,000 fans filled the grounds and the larger portion seemed to be on hand in the hope of seeing Johnson achieve his life's ambition and cap a world's series game. They cheered him to the echo in the earlier part of the game and as the contest wore on and it became evident that the Giants were going to win even the most rabid Giant fans curbed their enthusiasm, realizing that Walter Johnson, probably the greatest pitcher the game has ever known, was taking the bitterest setback of his career. Johnson, however, took his defeat grimly and hid his deepest feelings, although the disappointment could be plainly seen on his face.

SAYS MCGRAW IS MASTER MANAGER

Winning Four Straight
Pennants Gives Him
the Palm.

By HENRY L. FARRELL
(United Press Sports Editor.)

New York, Oct. 9.—(United Press.)—After breaking a precedent of 49 years' duration by winning four major league pennants in a row and after winning this year what was his tenth National League championship, John J. McGraw is entitled to be recognized as the master-manager of all times.

McGraw has won just double the number of pennants that any rival National League manager has achieved, and he is four ahead of Connie Mack, the old wizard, who won six championships with the Philadelphia Athletics.

The Giant leader had to be the world's smartest manager and best leader to win the National League pennant this year. He had to win with a team that was not the best in the league and that was cracked by the loss of two stars in the last hard week of the race.

Just ten years ago McGraw had a fourth pennant right at his finger tips when the Boston Braves popped up from nowhere and ran away with the pennant. This year he escaped narrowly from the same deal when the Brooklyn Robins jumped out in mid-season and ran the champions clear up to the wire.

His genius at keeping players on their toes in the tightest places was shown in the last week of the pennant race when Frank Frisch and Heinie Groh, two mainstays of the offense and the defense, were injured and had to be replaced.

McGraw put Freddy Lindstrom, an 18-year-old rookie, on third base, and astounded the fans by placing George Kelly, the regular first baseman, in centerfield and then switching him to second base with Bill Terry, a 21-year-old rookie, on first.

It wasn't the most finished or the most graceful combination, but it was good enough to win the important games in the Pittsburgh series that had much to do with the winning of the pennant.

McGraw always had insisted that a team is not stronger than its reserves, and how well he had figured and planned for such an emergency was shown in the last week when he called upon fall back on the reserves.

The credit that the Giants should get can be realized only when a mental picture is drawn of the Washington Senators without Harris and Blume, the Pittsburgh Pirates without Maranville and Traynor, the Yankees without Joe Judge and Brian Ward.

The Yankees had to worry along without Ward for a month, and Miller Higgins, the manager of the former champion, admitted that it was the loss of Ward that brought about the team.

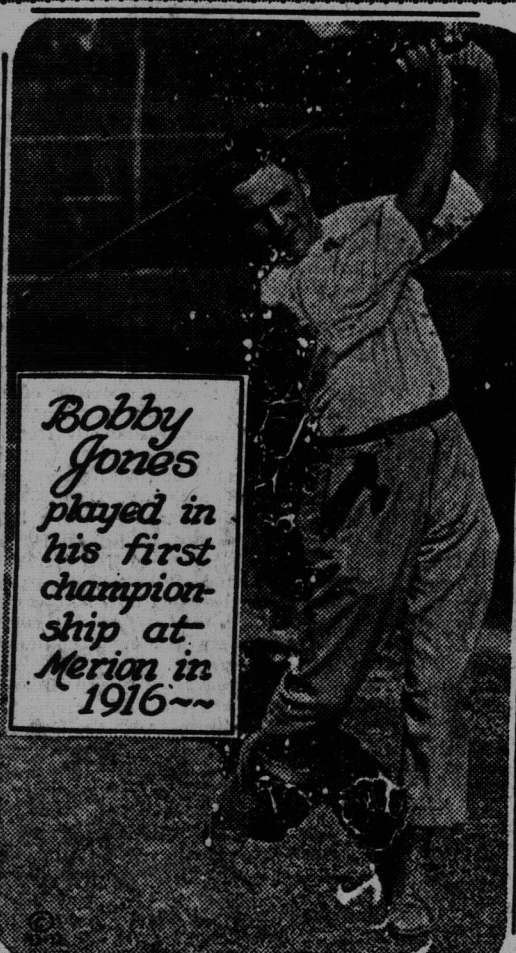

McGraw always has been forced to be a brilliant strategist. He has had an extraordinary team. When great teams of the past are being discussed you hear many critics talking about a Giant team with the reverence and respect in the comments about the National League could have gone through what the Giants endured all season.

When the team cracked on its last western trip, McGraw was game enough to try experiments that caused other managers to start here and there in wonder. The centered field position was bothering McGraw and he couldn't like Neff's work in left field. So he benched Neff and put George Kelly in center.

The winning of four straight pennants was McGraw's ambition of a lifetime. There is little more now that he can

WILD PITCHES ARE USUALLY COSTLY

Billy Evans Says They are Generally the Result of Pressing.

Fate plays some unusual pranks in baseball. Losing a ball game on a wild pitch is the unusual. During the past season I saw only two ball games decided in such a manner, says Billy Evans.

Strangely enough they came in the final series of the season, the final clash between New York and Detroit. Detroit won all three games, two of them on wild pitches, one on a bad throw by the brilliant Joe Judge, baseball's premier third sacker. Those three defeats really sounded the death knell to the Yankees' pennant chances.

Perfect play in that series would have probably won the 1923 champions two games, perhaps all three. The break of the game favored the Detroit club and the Tigers won.

Wild pitches as a rule are the result of pressing. In an effort to get a lot of stuff on the ball trying to pitch out of a hole a wild pitch often results.

In one game of the series, with the bases filled, Bob Shawkey, sent in as relief pitcher, caused the first batter to face him to strike out and the next one pop up. It seemed as if he would

GRAND CIRCUIT MEET.

Lexington, Ky., Oct. 8.—Driver Thomas Murphy added to his impressive showing this year by winning three races on today's grand circuit card, which included the Phoenix for 204 paces with Baron Worthy and the Ashland for 211 trotters with Edna Dugan. For extra measure he also won the 222 trot with Henry W. Oliver's Edie Scott.

The real fight developed in the 212 pace in which winners fought it out in the final heat. Brook Vole, in the stable of McDonald, was a big favorite, but, unaccountably almost caused his downfall. He made breaks in three of the heats, but in the fourth was so much the best that he got up in time to win in a stretch battle.
